PREFACE.

芦荟类 ANY find much Fault with the calling professing Christians, that dif-fer one from another in some Matters of Opinion, by distinct Names; especially calling them by the Names of particular Men, who have diftinguished themfelves as Maintainers and Promoters of those Opinions: as the calling fome professing Christians Arminians, from Arminius; others Arians, from Arius; others Socinians, from Socinus, and the like. They think it unjust in it felf; as it feems to suppose and suggest, that the Persons mark'd out by these Names, received those Doctrines which they entertain, out of Regard to, and Reliance on those Men after whom they are named; as tho' they made them their Rule: in the same Manner, as the Followers of Christ are called Christians; after his Name, whom they regard and depend upon, as their great Head and Rule. Whereas, this is an unjust and groundless Imputation on those that go under the foremention'd Denominations. Thus (say they) there is not the least Ground to suppose, that the chief A 2

chief Divines, who embrace the Scheme of Doctrine which is by many called Arminianism, believe it the more because Arminius believed it: and that there is no Reason to think any other, than that they fincerely and impartially study the holy Scriptures, and enquire after the Mind of Christ, with as much Judgment and Sincerity, as any of those that call them by these Names; that they seek after Truth, and are not careful whether they think exactly as Arminius did; yea, that in fome Things they actually differ from him. This Practice is also esteemed actually injurious on this Account, that it is supposed naturally to lead the Multitude to imagine the Difference between Persons thus named and others, to be greater than it is; yea, as tho? it were so great, that they must be as it were another Species of Beings. And they object against it as arising from an uncharitable, narrow, contracted Spirit; which, they fay, commonly inclines Persons to confine all that is good to themselves and their own Party, and to make a wide Distinction between themselves and others, and stigmatize those that differ from them with odious Names. They fay moreover, that the keeping up fuch a Diftinction of Names has a direct Tendency to uphold Distance and Disaffection, and keep alive mutual Hatred among Christians, who ought all to be united in Friendship and Charity, however they can't in all Things think alike.

I confess, these Things are very plausible. And I will not deny, that there are some unhappy Consequences of this Distinction of Names, and that Men's Infirmities and evil Dispositions often make an ill Improvement of it. But yet I humbly conceive, these Objecti ns are carried far beyond Reason. The Generality of Mankind are disposed enough, and a great Deal too much, to Uncharitable-ness, and to be censorious and bitter towards those that differ from them in religious Opinions: which evil Temper of Mind will take Occasion to exert it self, from many Things in themselves innocent, useful and necessary. But yet there is no Necessity to suppose, that the thus distinguishing Persons of different Opinions by different Names, arises mainly from an uncharitable Spirit. It may arise from the Disposition there is in Mankind (whom God has diftinguished with an Ability and Inclination for Speech) to improve the Benefit of Language, in the proper Use and Design of Names, given to Things which they have often Occasion to speak of, or signify their Minds about; which is to enable them to express their Ideas with Ease and Expedition, without being encumber'd with an obscure and difficult Circumlocution. And the thus distinguishing Persons of different Opinions in religious Matters may not imply, nor infer any more than that there is a Difference, and that the Difference is fuch as we find we have often Occasion to take Notice of, and make Mention of. That which we A_3 have have frequent Occasion to speak of (whatever it be, that gives the Occasion) this wants a Name: and 'tis always a Defect in Language, in such Cases, to be obliged to make use of a Description, instead of a Name. Thus we have often Occasion to speak of those who are the Descendants of the ancient Inhabitants of France, who were Subjects or Heads of the Government of that Land, and spake the Language peculiar to it; in Distinction from the Descendants of the Inhabitants of Spain, who belonged to that Community, and spake the Language of that Country. And therefore we find the great Need of distinct Names to fignify these different Sorts of People, and the great Convenience of those distinguishing Words, French, and Spaniards; by which the Signification of our Minds is quick and easy, and our Speech is delivered from the Burden of a continual Reiteration of diffuse Descriptions, with which it must otherwife be embarrass'd.

That the Difference of the Opinions of those, who in their general Scheme of Divinity agree with these two noted Men, Calvin, and Arminius, is a Thing there is often Occasion to speak of, is what the Practice of the latter, it self confesses; who are often, in their Discourses and Writings, taking Notice of the supposed absurd and pernicious Opinions of the former Sort. And therefore the making Use of different Names in this Case can't reasonably be objected against, or condemned, as a Thing which must come from fo bad a Cause as they assign. It is easy to be accounted for, without supposing it to arise from any other Source, than the Exigence and natural Tendency of the State of Things; considering the Faculty and Disposition God has given Mankind, to express Things which they have frequent Occasion to mention, by certain distinguishing Names. It is an Effect that is similar to what we see arise, in innumerable Cases which are parallel, where the Case is not at all blame-worthy.

Nevertheless, at first I had Thoughts of carefully avoiding the Use of the Appellation, Arminian, in this Treatise. But I soon found I should be put to great Difficulty by it; and that my Discourse would be so incumber'd with an often repeated Circumlocution, instead of a Name, which would express the Thing intended, as well and better, that I altered my Purpose. And therefore I must ask the Excuse of such as are apt to be offended with Things of this Nature, that I have so freely used the Term Arminian in the following Discourse. I profess it to be without any Defign, to stigmatize Persons of any Sort with a Name of Reproach, or at all to make them appear more odious. If when I had Occafion to speak of those Divines who are commonly called by this Name, I had, instead of styling them Arminians, called them these Men, 28 Dr. Whithy does Calvinistic Divines; it probably would not have been taken any better, or thought to shew a better Temper, or more good Manners. I have done as I would be done A 4 done by, in this Matter. However the Term Calvinist is in these Days, among most, a Term of greater Reproach than the Term Arminian; yet I should not take it at all amiss, to be called a Calvinist, for Distinction's Sake: tho' I utterly disclaim a Dependance on Calvin, or believing the Doctrines which I hold, because he believed and taught them; and cannot justly be charged with believing in every Thing just as he taught.

But lest I should really be an Occasion of Injury to fome Perfons, I would here give Notice, that though I generally speak of that Doctrine, concerning Free-will and moral Agency, which I oppose, as an Arminian Doctrine; yet I would not be understood, that every Divine or Author whom I have Occasion to mention as maintaining that Doctrine, was properly an Arminian, or one of that Sort which is commonly called by that Name. Some of them went far beyond the Arminians: And I would by no Means charge Arminians in general with all the corrupt Doctrine, which these maintain'd. Thus for Instance, it would be very injurious, if I should rank Arminian Divines in general, with fuch Authors as Mr. Chubb. I doubt not, many of them have some of his Doctrines in Abhorrence; tho' he agrees, for the most Part, with Arminians, in his Notion of the Freedom of the Will. And on the other Hande tho' I suppose this Notion to be a leading Article in the Arminian Scheme, that which, if purfued in it's Confequences, will truly infer, fer, or naturally lead to all the rest; yet I don't charge all that have held this Doctrine, with being Arminians. For whatever may be the Consequences of the Doctrine really, yet fome that hold this Doctrine, may not own nor see these Consequences; and it would be unjust, in many Instances, to charge every Author with believing and maintaining all the real Consequences of his avowed Doctrines. And I defire it may be particularly noted, that though I have Occasion in the following Discourse, often to mention the Author of the Book entitled, An Essay on the Freedom of the Will, in God and the Creature, as holding that Notion of Freedom of Will, which I oppose; yet I don't mean to call him an Arminian: however in that Doctrine he agrees with Arminians, and departs from the current and general Opinion of Calvinists. If the Author of that Effay be the same as it is commonly afcribed to, he doubtless was not one that ought to bear that Name. But however good a Divine he was in many Respects, yet that particular Arminian Doctrine which he mainrain'd, is never the better for being held by fuch an One: nor is there less Need of oppofing it on that Account; but rather is there the more Need of it; as it will be likely to have the more pernicious Influence, for being taught by a Divine of his Name and Character; supposing the Doctrine to be wrong, and in it felf to be of an ill Tendency.

I have Nothing further to fay by Way of Preface; but only to bespeak the Reader's Candour, and calm Attention to what I have written. The Subject is of fuch Importance, as to demand Attention, and the most thorough Consideration. Of all Kinds of Knowlege that we can ever obtain, the Knowledge of God, and the Knowlege of our felves, are the most important. As Religion is the great Business, for which we are created, and on which our Happiness depends; and as Religion confists in an Intercourse between our felves and our Maker; and so has it's Foundation in God's Nature and our's, and in the Relation that God and we stand in to each other; therefore a true Knowledge of both must be needful in Order to true Religion. But the Knowledge of our felves confifts chiefly in right Apprehensions concerning those two chief Faculties of our Nature, the Underflanding and Will. Both are very important; yet the Science of the latter must be confess'd to be of greatest Moment; in as much as all Vertue and Religion have their Seat more immediately in the Will, confisting more especially in right Acts and Habits of this Faculty. And the grand Question about the Freedom of the Will, is the main Point that belongs to the Science of the Will. Therefore I fay, the Importance of this Subject greatly demands the Attention of Christians, and especially of Divines. But as to my Manner of handling the Subject, I will be far from prefurning to fay, that it is fuch as demanas the Attention Attention of the Reader to what I have written. I am ready to own, that in this Matter I depend on the Reader's Courtefy. But only thus far I may have some Colour for putting in a Claim; that if the Reader be disposed to pass his Censure on what I have written, I may be fully and patiently heard, and well attended to, before I am condemned. However, this is what I would humbly ask of my Readers; together with the Prayers of all sincere Lovers of Truth, that I may have much of that Spirit which Christ promised his Disciples, which guides into all Truth; and that the blessed and powerful Instuences of this Spirit would make Truth victorious in the World.

OF THE

CONTENTS.

PART I.

Wherein are explain'd various Terms and Things belonging to the Subject of the ensuing Discourse.

SECT. II. Concerning the Nature of the Will.
Pag. 1, &c.
SECT. III. Concerning the Determination of the Will. 6
SECT. III. Concerning the Meaning of the Terms Neceffity, Impossibility, Inability, &c. and of Contingence 18
SECT. IV. Of the Distinction of natural and moral Necessity and Inability.

SECT. V. Concerning the Notion of Liberty, and of moral Agency.

38

PART. II.

Wherein it is confidered,	Whether there is, or can be any fuch Sort of Freed	OM of WILL, as that wherein Arminians place the Esse	nce of the Liberty of all moral Agents; and whether a	ny fuch Thing ever was, or can be conceived of.	, ,

And infers a Necessity of Volition, as much as an absolute Decree.

Sect. XIII. Whether we suppose the Volitions of moral Agents to be connected with any Thing antecedent, or not, yet they must be necessary, in such a Sense, as to overthrow Arminian Liberty.

183

PART III.

- Wherein is enquired, Whether any fuch Liberty of Will as Arminians hold, be necessary to moral Agency, Vertue and Vice, Praise and Dispraise, &c.
- SECT. I. God's moral Excellency necessary, yet vertuous and Praiseworthy.

 Pag. 188
- SECT. II. The Acts of the Will of the human Soul of JESUS Christ necessarily holy, yet vertuous, praise-worthy, rewardable, &c. 194
- SECT. III. The Case of such as are given up of God to Sin, and of fallen Men in general, proves moral Necessity and Inability to be consistent with Blame-worthiness. 213
- SECT. IV. Command, and Obligation to Obedience, confiftent with moral Inability to obey.
- SECT. V. That Sincerity of Desires and Endeavours, which is supposed to excuse in the Non-performance of Things in themselves good, particularly considered. 237
- SECT. VI. Liberty of Indifference, not only not necessary to Vertue, but utterly inconsistent with it: and all, either vertuous or vicious Habits and Inclinations, inconsistent with Arminian Notions of Liberty, and moral Agency.
- SECT. VII. Arminian Notions of moral Agency inconfishent with all Influence of Motive and Inducement, in either vertuous or vicious Actions.

PART IV.

- Wherein the chief Grounds of the Reasonings of Arminians, in Support and Defence of their Notions of Liberty, moral Agency, &c. and against the opposite Doctrine, are considered.
- SECT. I. The Essence of the Vertue and Vice of the Dispositions of the Heart, and Acts of the Will, lies not in their Causes, but their Nature.

 SECT.

SECT. II. The Falfeness and Inconsistence of that metaphyfical Notion of Action and Agency, which feems to be generally entertain'd by the Defenders of the foremen-tion'd Notions of Liberty, moral Agency, &c. 278 SECT. III. The Reasons why some think it contrary to common Sense, to suppose Things which are necessary, to be worthy of either Praise or Blame. 288
SECT. IV. It is agreable to common Sense, and the natural Notions of Mankind, to suppose moral Necessity to be confistent with Praise and Blame, Reward and Punish-SECT. V. Concerning those Objections, That this Scheme of Necessity renders all Means and Endeavours for the avoiding of Sin or the obtaining Vertue and Holiness, vain and to no Purpose; and that it makes Men no more than meer Machines, in Affairs of Morality and Religion. 3cg
SECT. VI. Concerning that Objection against the Doctrine which has been maintained. That it some with the which has been maintain'd, That it agrees with the Stoical Doctrine of Fate, and the Opinion of Mr. Hobbes.
SECT. VII. Concerning the Necessity of the divine Will.
323
SECT. VIII. Some further Objections against the moral Necessity of God's Volitions, considered.
SECT. IX. Concerning that Objection against the Doctrine which has been maintain'd, That it makes God the $A \cdot A \cdot C \cdot C$
Author of Sin.
SECT. X. Concerning Sin's first Entrance into the World.
376
SECT. XI. Of a supposed Inconsistence of these Principles with God's moral Character.
SECT. XII. Of a supposed Tendency of these Principles to Atheism, and Licentiousness. 385
SECT. XIII. Concerning that Objection against the Rea-foning by which the Calviniftic Doctrine is supported,
That it is metaphysical and abstruse.

Wherein are explained and stated various Terms and Things belonging to the Subject of the ensuing Discourse.

SECTION I.

Concerning the Nature of the Will.

T may possibly be thought, that there is no great Need of going about to define or describe the Will; this Word being generally as well understood as any other Words we can use to explain it: And so perhaps it would be, had not Philosophers, Metaphysicians and Polemic Divines brought the Matter into Obscurity by the Things they have said of it. But since it is so, I think it may be of some Use, and will tend to the greater Clearness in the following Discourse, to say a sew Things concerning it.

And

And therefore I observe, that the Will (without any metaphysical Resining) is plainly, That by which the Mind chuses any Thing. The Faculty of the Will is that Faculty or Power or Principle of Mind by which it is capable of chusing: An Act of the Will is the same as an Act of Chusing or Choice.

If any think 'tis a more perfect Definition of the Will, to fay, that it is that by which the Soul either chuses or resules; I am content with it: tho' I think that 'tis enough to fay, It's that by which the Soul chuses: For in every Act of Will whatsoever, the Mind chuses one Thing rather than another; it chuses something rather than the Contrary, or rather than the Want or Non-Existence of that Thing. So in every Act of Refusal, the Mind chuses the Absence of the Thing refused; The Positive and the Negative are set before the Mind for it's Choice, and it chuses the Negative; and the Mind's making it's Choice in that Cafe is properly the Act of the Will: The Will's determining between the two is a voluntary determining; that is the fame Thing as making a Choice. So that whatever Names we call the Act of the Will by, Chusing, Refusing, Approving, Disapproving, Liking, Disliking, Embracing, Rejecting, Determining, Directing, Commanding, Forbidding, Inclining or being averse, a being pleased or displeas'd with; all may be reduced to this of Chusing. For the Soul to act voluntarily, is evermore to act electively.

Mr. Locke * fays, "The Will fignifies Nothing" but a Power or Ability to prefer or chuse." And in the foregoing Page fays, "The Word Prefer-" ring feems best to express the Act of Volition;"

But

^{*} Human Understanding, Edit. 7. Vol. I.P. 197.

But adds, that "it does it not precifely; For (fays he)" tho' a Man would prefer Flying to "Walking, yet who can fay he ever wills it?" But the Instance he mentions don't prove that there is any Thing else in Willing, but meerly Preferring: For it hould be confidered what is the next and immediate Object of the Will, with respect to a Man's Walking, or any other external Action; which is not being removed from one Place to another; on the Earth, or thro' the Air; these are remoter Objects of Preference; but fuch or fuch an immediate Exertion of himfelf. The Thing nextly chosen or prefer'd when a Man wills to walk, is not his being removed to fuch a Place where he would be, but fuch an Exertion and Motion of his Legs and Feet &c. in order to it. And his willing fuch an Alteration in his Body in the present Moment, is nothing else but his chusing or preferring fuch an Alteration in his Body at fuch a Moment, or his liking it better than the Forbearance of it. And God has fo made and establish'd the human Nature, the Soul being united to a Body in proper State, that the Soul preferring or chufing fuch an immediate Exertion or Alteration of the Body, fuch an Alteration instantaneously follows. There is nothing else in the Actions of my Mind, that I am confcious of while I walk, but only my preferring or chufing, thro' fuccessive Moments, that there should be such Alterations of my external Sensations and Motions; together with a concurring habitual Expectation that it will be fo; having ever found by Experience, that on fuch an immediate Preference, fuch Senfations and Motions do actually instantaneously, and constantly arise. But it is not so in the Case of Flying: Tho' a Man may be faid remotely to chuse or prefer Flying; yet he don't chuse or prefer, inclina to or defire, under Circumstances in View, any immediate.

immediate Exertion of the Members of his Body in order to it; because he has no Expectation that he should obtain the defired End by any such Exertion; and he don't prefer or incline to any bodily Exertion or Effort under this apprehended Circumstance, of it's being wholly in vain. So that if we carefully distinguish the proper Objects of the several Acts of the Will, it will not appear by this, and fuch-like Instances, that there is any Difference between Volition and Preference; or that a Man's chusing, liking best, or being best pleased with a Thing, are not the same with his willing that Thing; as they frem to be according to those general and more natural Notions of Men, according to which Language is formed. Thus an Act of the Will is commonly express'd by it's pleasing a Man to do thus or thus; and a Man doing as he wills, and doing as he pleases, are the same Thing in common Speech.

Mr. Locke fays, + " The Will is perfectly dif-"tinguish'd from Desire; which in the very same " Action may have a quite contrary Tendency " from that which our Wills set us upon. A " Man (fays he) whom I cannot deny, may oblige " me to use Perswasions to another, which, at " the fame Time I am speaking, I may wish may " not prevail on him. In this Case 'tis plain the " Will and Defire run counter." I don't suppose, that Will and Desire are Words of precisely the same Signification: Will seems to be a Word of a more general Signification, extending to Things present and absent. Desire respects something absent. I may present my present Situation and Posture, suppose sitting still, or having my Eyes open, and fo may will it. But yet I can't think think they are fo entirely diffinct, that they can ever be properly faid to run counter. A Man never, in any Instance, wills any Thing contrary to his Defires, or defires any Thing contrary to his Will. The foremention'd Instance, which Mr. Locke produces, don't prove that he ever does. He may, on fome Confideration or other, will to utter Speeches which have a Tendency to perfwade another, and fill may defire that they may not perfwade him: But yet his Will and Defire don't run counter at all: The Thing which he wills, the very fame he defires; and he don't will a Thing, and defire the contrary in any Particular. In this Instance, it is not carefully observed, what is the Thing will'd, and what is the Thing defired: If it were, it would be found that Will and Defire don't clash in the least. The Thing will'd on some Confideration, is to utter fuch Words; and certainly, the fame Confideration fo influences him, that he don't defire the contrary; all Things confidered, he chuses to utter such Words, and don't defire not to utter 'em. And so as to the Thing which Mr. Locke speaks of as defired, viz. that the Words, tho' They tend to perfwade, should not be effectual to that End, his Will is not contrary to this; he don't will that they should be effectual, but rather wills that they should not, as he defires. In order to prove that the Will and Defire may run counter, it should be shown that they may be contrary one to the other in the fame Thing, or with respect to the very same Object of Will or Defire: But here the Objects are two; and in each, taken by themselves, the Will and Defire agree. And 'tis no Wonder that they fhould not agree in different Things, however little diffinguifeed they are in their Nature. The Will may not agree with the Will, nor Defire agree with Defire, in electent Things. As in this very Instance which ivir. B 3 Locke 6 Of the Determination of the Will. Part I.

Locke mentions, a Person may, on some Consideration, desire to use Perswasions, and at the same Time may desire they may not prevail; But ret no Body will say, that Desire runs counter to Desire; or that this proves that Desire is personably a distinct Thing from Desire—The like might be observed of the other Instance Mr. Locke produces, of a Man's desiring to be eased of Pain, &c.

But not to dwell any longer on this, whether Defire and Will, and whether Preference and Volition be precifely the same Things or no; yet, I trust it will be allowed by all, that in every Act of Will there is an Act of Choice; that in every Volition there is a Preference, or a prevailing Inclination of the Soul, whereby the Soul, at that Instant, is out of a State of perfect Indifference, with respect to the direct Object of the Volition. So that in every Act, or going forth of the Will, there is some Preponderation of the Mind or Inclination, one Way rather than another; and the Soul had rather bave or do one Thing than another, or than not to have or do that Thing; and that there, where there is absolutely no preferring or chusing, but a perfect continuing Equilibrium, there is no Volition.

SECTION II.

Concerning the Determination of the Will.

Y determining the Will, if the Phrase be used with any Meaning, must be intended, causing that the Ast of the Will or Choice should be thus, and not otherwise: And the Will is said to be determined, when, in Consequence of some Astion, or Influence, its Choice is directed to, and fix'd upon a particular Object. As when we speak of the Determination of Motion, we mean causing the Motion of the Body to be fuch a Way, or in fuch a Direction, rather than another.

To talk of the Determination of the Will, supposes an Effect, which must have a Cause. If the Will be determined, there is a Determiner. This must be supposed to be intended even by them that fay, the Will determines itself. Ir it be so, the Will is both Determiner and determined; it is a Cause that acts and produces Effects upon it felf, and is the Object of its own Influence and Action.

With respect to that grand Enquiry, What determines the Will, it would be very tedious and unnecessary at present to enumerate and examine all the various Opinions, which have been advanced concerning this Matter; nor is it needful that I should enter into a particular Disquisition of all Points debated in Disputes on that Question, Whether the Will always follows the last Distate of the Understanding. It is sufficient to my present Purpose to fay, -It is that Motive, which, as it stands in the View of the Mind, is the strongest, that determines the Will.—But it may be necessary that I should a little explain my Meaning in this.

By Motive, I mean the whole of that which moves, excites or invites the Mind to Volition, whether that be one Thing fingly, or many Things conjunctly. Many particular Things may concur and unite their Strength to induce the Mind; and when it is fo, all together are as it were one complex Motive. And when I speak of the firing of Motive, I have Respect to the Strength of the whole that operates to induce to a particular Act of Volition, whether that be the Strength of one Thing alone, or of many together. Whatever

Whatever is a Motive, in this Sense, must be something that is extant in the View or Apprehension of the Understanding, or perceiving Faculty. Nothing can induce or invite the Mind to will or act any Thing, any further than it is perceived, or is fome Way or other in the Mind's view; for what is wholly unperceived, and perfectly out of the Mind's view, can't affect the Mind at all. 'Tis most evident, that nothing is in the Mind, or reaches it, or takes any Hold of it, any otherwise than as it is perceived or thought of

And I think it must also be allowed by all, that every Thing that is properly called a Motive, Excitement or Inducement to a perceiving willing Agent, has fome Sort and Degree of Tendency, or Advantage to move or excite the Will, previous to the Effect, or to the Act of the Will excited. This previous Tendency of the Motive is what I call the Strength of the Motive. That Motive which has a less Degree of previous Advantage or Tendency to move the Will, or that appears less inviting, as it stands in the View of the Mind, is what I call a weaker Motive. On the contrary, that which appears most inviting, and has, by what appears concerning it to the Understanding or Apprehension, the greatest Degree of previous Tendency to excite and induce the Choice, is what I call the ftrongest Motive. And in this Sense, I suppose the Will is always determined by the strongest Motive.

Things that exist in the View of the Mind have their Strength, Tendency or Advantage to move or excite its Will, from many Things appertaining to the Nature and Circumstances of the Thing view d, the Nature and Circumstances of the Mind that views, and the Degree and Manner of its View; w hich which it would perhaps be hard to make a perfect Enumeration of. But so much I think may be determin'd in general, without Room for Controverfy, that whatever is perceived or apprehended by an intelligent and voluntary Agent, which has the Nature and Influence of a Motive to Volition or Choice, is confider'd or view'd as good; nor has it any Tendency to invite or engage the Election of the Soul in any further Degree than it appears fuch. For to fay otherwise, would be to fay, that Things that appear have a Tendency by the Appearance they make, to engage the Mind to elect them, fome other Way than by their appearing eligible to it; which is abfurd. And therefore it must be true, in some Sense, that the Will always is as the greatest apparent Good is, But only, for the right understanding of this, two Things must be well and diffinctly observed.

1. It must be observed in what Sense I use the Term Good; namely, as of the fame Import with Agreable. To appear good to the Mind, as I use the Phrase, is the same as to appear agreable, or seem pleasing to the Mind. Certainly, nothing appears inviting and eligible to the Mind, or tending to engage it's Inclination and Choice, confider'd as evil or disagreable; nor indeed, as indisferent, and neither agreable nor difagreable. But if it tends to draw the Inclination, and move the Will, it must be under the Notion of that which suits the Mind. And therefore that must have the greatest Tendency to attract and engage it, which, as it stands in the Mind's View, fuits it best, and pleases it most; and in that Sense, is the greatest apparent Good: to fay otherwife, is little, if any Thing, short of a direct and plain Contradiction.

The Word Good, in this Sense, includes in its Signification, the Removal or Avoiding of Evil, or of that which is difagreable and uneafy. 'Tis agreable and pleafing, to avoid what is difagreable and difpleafing, and to have Uneafiness removed. So that here is included what Mr. Locke supposes determines the Will. For when he speaks of Uneasiness as determining the Will, he must be understood as supposing that the End or Aim which governs in the Volition or Act of Preference, is the Avoiding or Removal of that Uneasiness; and that is the same Thing as chusing and seeking what is more easy and agreable.

2. When I fay, the Will is as the greatest apparent Good is, or (as I have explain'd it) that Volition has always for its Object the Thing which appears most agreable; it must be carefully obferved, to avoid Confusion and needless Objection, that I speak of the direct and immediate Object of the Act of Volition; and not some Object that the Act of Will has not an immediate, but only an indirect and remote Respect to. Many Acts of Volition have fome remote Relation to an Object, that is different from the Thing most immediately will'd and chosen. Thus, when a Drunkard has his Liquor before him, and he has to chuse whether to drink it, or no; the proper and immediate Objects, about which his present Volition is conversant, and between which his Choice now decides, are his own Acts, in drinking the Liquor, or letting it alone; and this will certainly be done according to what, in the prefent View of his Mind, taken in the whole of it, is most agreable to him. If he chuses or wills to drink it, and not to let it alone; then this Action, as it stands in the View of his Mind, with all that belongs to its Appearance there, is more agreable and pleasing than letting it alone. But

But the Objects to which this Act of Volition may relate more remotely, and between which his Choice may determine more indirectly, are the prefent pleasure the Man expects by drinking, and the future Mifery which he judges will be the Confequence of it: He may judge that this future Mifery, when it comes, will be more difagreable and unpleasant, than refraining from drinking now would be. But these two Things are not the proper Objects that the Act of Volition spoken of is nextly conversant about. For the Act of Will spoken of is concerning present Drinking or Forbearing to drink. If he wills to drink, then Drinking is the proper Object of the act of his Will; and drinking, on fome Account or other, now appears most agreable to him, and lats him best. If he chuses to refrain, then Refressing is the immediate Object of his Will, and is most pleasing to him. If in the Choice he makes in the Case, he prefers a present Pleasure to a future Advantage, which he judges will be greater when it comes; then a lesser present Pleasure appears more agreable to him than a greater Advantage at a Distance. If on the contrary a future Advantage is prefer'd, then that appears most agreable, and fuits him best. And so still the prefent Volition is as the greatest apparent Good at present is.

I have rather chosen to express my self thus, that the Will always is as the greatest apparent Good, or as what appears most agreable, is, than to say that the Will is determined by the greatest apparent Good, or by what seems most agreable; because an appearing most agreable or pleasing to the Mind, and the Mind's prestring and chusing, seem hardly to be properly and parsectly distinct. If strict Propriety of Speech be insisted on, it may more properly perly be faid, that the voluntary Action which is the immediate Confequence and Fruit of the Mind's Volition or Choice, is determined by that which appears most agreable, than the Preference or Choice it self; but that the Act of Volition it self is always determin'd by that in or about the Mind's View of the Object, which causes it to appear most agreable. I fay, in or about the Mina's View of the Object, because what has Influence to render an Object in View agreable, is not only what at pears in the Object view'd, but also the Manner of the View, and the State and Circumstances of the Mind that views.—Particularly to enumerate all Things pertaining to the Mind's View of the Objects of Volition, which have Influence in their appearing agreable to the Mind, would be a Matter of no fmall Difficulty, and might require a Treatife by it felf, and is not necessary to my present Purpose. I shall therefore only mention some Things in general.

I. One Thing that makes an Object proposed to Choice agreable, is the apparent Nature and Circumstances of the Object. And there are various Things of this Sort, that have an Hand in rendring the Object more or less agreable; as,

1. That which appears in the Object, which renders it beautiful and pleafant, or deformed and irksom to the mind; viewing it as it is in it felf.

- 2. The apparent Degree of Pleasure or Trouble attending the Object, or the Consequence of it. Such Concomitants and Consequents being view'd as Circumstances of the Object, are to be considered as belonging to it, and as it were Parts of it; as it stands in the Mind's View, as a proposed Object of Choice.
- 3. The apparent State of the Pleasure or Trouble that appears, with Respect to Distance of Time; being being either nearer or farther off. 'Tis a Thing in it felf agreable to the Mind, to have Pleasure speedily; and disagreable, to have it delayed: So that if there be two equal Degrees of Pleasure set in the Mind's View, and all other Things are equal, but only one is beheld as near, and the other far off; the nearer will appear most agreable, and so will be chosen. Because, tho' the Agreableness of the Objects be exactly equal, as view'd in Themselves, yet not as view'd in their Circumstances; one of them having the additional Agreableness of the Circumstance of Nearness.

II. Another Thing that contributes to the Agreableness of an Object of Choice, as it stands in the Mind's View, is the Manner of the View. If the Object be something which appears connected with future Pleasure, not only will the Degree of apparent Pleasure have Insuence, but also the Manner of the View, especially in two Respects.

I. With respect to the Degree of Judgment, or Firmness of Assent, with which the Mind judges the Pleasure to be suture. Because it is more agreable to have a certain Happiness, than an uncertain one; and a Pleasure view'd as more probable, all other Things being equal, is more agreable to the Mind, than that which is view'd as less probable.

2. With respect to the Degree of the Idea of the suture Pleasure. With Regard to Things which are the Subject of our Thoughts, either past, prefent or future, we have much more of an Idea or Apprehension of some Things than others; that is, our Ideais much more clear, lively and strong. Thus the Ideas we have of sensitive Things by immediate Sensation, are usually much more lively than those we have by meer Imagination, or by Contemplation of them when absent. My Idea of the Sun.

when I look upon it, is more vivid, than when I only think of it. Our Idea of the sweet Relish of a delicious Fruit is usually stronger when we taste it, than when we only imagine it. And fometimes, the Idea we have of Things by Contemplation, are much stronger and clearer, than at other Times. Thus, a Man at one Time has a much stronger Idea of the Pleafure which is to be enjoyed in eating fome Sort of Food that he loves, than at another. Now the Degree, or Strength of the Idea or Sense that Men have of future Good or Evil, is one Thing that has great Influence on their Minds to excite Choice or Volition. When of two Kinds of future Pleasure, which the Mind considers of, and are prefented for Choice, both are supposed exactly equal by the Judgment, and both equally certain, and all other Things are equal but only one of them is what the Mind has a far more lively Sense of, than of the other; this has the greatest Advantage by far to affect and attract the Mind, and move the Will, 'Tis now more agreable to the Mind, to take the Pleasure it has a strong and lively Sense of, than that which it has only a faint Idea of. The View of the former is attended with the strongest Appetite, and the greatest Uneasiness attends the Want of it; and 'tis agreable to the Mind to have Uneafiness removed, and it's Appetite gratified. And if several future Enjoyments are presented together, as Competitors for the Choice of the Mind, some of them judged to be greater, and others less; the Mind also having a greater Sense and more lively Idea of the Good of fome of them, and of others a less; and some are view'd as of greater Certainty or Probability than others; and those Enjoyments that appear most agreable in one of these Respects, appears least so in others: In this Case, all other Things being equal, the Agreableness of a proposed Object of Choice

Choice will be in a Degree tome Way compounded of the Degree of Good supposed by the Judgment, the Degree of apparent Probability or Certainty of that Good, and the Degree of the View or Sense, or Liveliness of the Idea the Mind has, of that Good; because all together concur to constitute the Degree in which the Object appears at present agreable; and accordingly Volition will be determined.

I might further observe, the State of the Mind that views a proposed Object of Choice, is another Thing that contributes to the Agreableness or Disagreableness of that Object; the particular Temper which the Mind has by Nature, or that has been introduced and established by Education, Example, Custom, or some other Means; or the Frame or State that the Mind is in on a particular Occasion. That Object which appears agreable to one, does not fo to another. And the fame Object don't always appear alike agreable to the same Person, at different Times. It is most agreable to some Men, to follow their Reason; and to others, to follow their Appetites: To fome Men, it is more agreable to deny a vicious Inclination, than to gratify it: Others it fuits best to gratify the vilest Appetites. 'Tis more disagreable to fome Men than others, to counter-act a former Refolution. In these Respects, and many others which might be mention'd, different Things will be most agreable to different Persons; and not only fo, but to the fame Perfons at different Times.

But possibly 'tis needless and improper, to mention the Frame and State of the Mind, as a distinct Ground of the Agreableness of Objects from the other two mention'd before; viz. The apparent Nature and Circumstances of the Objects view'd, and the Manner of the View: Perhaps if we strictly consider confider the Matter, the different Temper and State of the Mind makes no Alteration as to the Agreableness of Objects, any other Way, than as it makes the Objects themselves appear differently beautiful or deformed, having apparent Pleafure or Pain attending them: And as it occasions the Manner of the View to be different, causes the Idea of Beauty or Deformity, Pleasure or Uneafinefs to be more or lefs lively.

However, I think fo much is certain, that Volition, in no one Instance that can be mentioned, is otherwise than the greatest apparent Good is, in the Manner which has been explain'd. Choice of the Mind never departs from that which, at that Time, and with Respect to the direct and immediate Objects of that Decision of the Mind, appears most agreable and pleasing, all Things confidered. If the immediate Objects of the Will are a Man's own Actions, then those Actions which appear most agreable to him he wills. now most agreable to him, all Things considered, to walk, then he now wills to walk. If it be now, upon the whole of what at present appears to him, most agreable to speak, then he chooses to speak: If it fuits him best to keep Silence, then he chooses to keep Silence. There is fcarcely a plainer and more universal Dictate of the Sense and Experience of Mankind, than that, when Men act voluntarily, and do what they please, then they do what suits them best, or what is most agreable to them. To say, that they do what they please, or what pleases them, but yet don't do what is agreable to them, is the fame Thing as to fay, they do what they please, but don't act their Pleasure; and that is to say, that they do what they please, and yet don't do what they please.

It appears from these Things, that in some Sense, the Will always follows the last Distate of the Understanding. But then the Understanding must be taken in a large Sense, as including the whole Faculty of Perception or Apprehension, and not meerly what is called Reason or Judgment. If by the Dictate of the Understanding is meant what Reason declares to be best or most for the Person's Happiness, taking in the whole of his Duration, it is not true, that the Will always follows the last Dictate of the Understanding. Such a Dictate of Reason is quite a different Matter from Things appearing now most agreable; all Things being put together which pertain to the Mind's present Perceptions, Apprehenfions or Ideas, in any Respect. Altho' that Dictate of Reason, when it takes Place, is one Thing that is put into the Scales, and is to be confidered as a Thing that has Concern in the compound Influence which moves and induces the Will; and is one Thing that is to be confidered in estimating the Degree of that appearance of Good which the Will always follows; either as having its Influence added to other Things, or subducted from them. When it concurs with other things, then its Weight is added to them, as put into the same Scale; but when it is against them, it is as a Weight in the opposite Scale, where it resists the Influence of other Things: yet it's Resistance is often overcome by their greater Weight, and fo the Act of the Will is determined in Opposition to it.

The Things which I have faid may, I hope, ferve, in some Measure, to illustrate and confirm the Position I laid down in the Beginning of this Section, viz. That the Will is always determined by the strongest Motive, or by that View of the Mind which has the greatest Degree of previous Tendency to excite Volition. But whether I have been so happy happy as rightly to explain the Thing wherein confifts the Strength of Motives, or not, yet my failing in this will not overthrow the Position it self; which carries much of its own Evidence with it, and is the Thing of chief Importance to the Purpose of the ensuing Discourse: And the Truth of it, I hope, will appear with greater Clearness, before I have finished what I have to say on the Subject of human Liberty.

SECTION III.

Concerning the Meaning of the Terms Necessity, Impossibility, Inability, &c; and of Contingence.

HE Words Neceffary, Impossible, &c. are abundantly used in Controversies about Freewill and moral Agency; and therefore the Sense in which they are used, should be clearly understood.

Here I might fay, that a Thing is then faid to be necessary, when it must be, and cannot be otherwise. But this would not properly be a Definition of Necessity, or an Explanation of the Word, any more than if I explain'd the Word must, by there being a Necessity. The Words must, can, and cannot, need Explication as much as the Words necessary, and impessible; excepting that the former are Words that Children commonly use, and know something of the Meaning of earlier than the latter.

The Word necessary, as used in common Speech, is a relative Term; and relates to some supposed Opposition made to the Existence of the Thing spoken of, which is overcome, or proves in vain to hinder or alter it. That is necessary, in the original and proper Sense of the Word, which is, or will be, notwithstanding all supposable Opposition.

fition. To fay, that a Thing is necessary, is the same Thing as to say, that it is impossible should not be: But the Word impossible is manifestly a relative Term, and has Reference to supposed Power exerted to bring a Thing to pass, which is insufficient for the Effect; As the Word unable is relative, and has Relation to Ability or Endeavour which is insufficient; and as the Word Irressible is relative, and has always Reference to Resistance which is made, or may be made to some Force or Power tending to an Effect, and is insufficient to withstand the Power, or hinder the Effect. The common Notion of Necessity and Impossibility implies something that frustrates Endeavour or Desire.

Here feveral Things are to be noted.

- 1. Things are faid to be necessary in general, which are or will be notwithstanding any supposable Opposition from us or others, or from whatever Quarter. But things are said to be necessary to us, which are or will be notwithstanding all Opposition supposable in the Case from us. The same may be observed of the Word impossible, and other such like Terms.
- 2. These Terms necessary, impossible, irresissible, &c. do especially belong to Controversy about Liberty and moral Agency, as used in the latter of the two Senses now mention'd, viz. as necessary or impossible to us, and with Relation to any supposable Opposition or Endeavour of ours.
- 3. As the Word Necessity, in it's vulgar and common Use, is relative, and has always Reference to some supposable infussicient Opposition; so when we speak of any Thing as necessary to us, it is with Relation to some supposable Opposition of our Wills, or some voluntary Exertion or Effort of ours to the contrary. For we don't properly make Opposition to an Event, any otherwise than as we voluntarily oppose it. Things are said to be what must be, or necessarily are, as to us, when they are, or will be, though we desire or endeavour the contrary, or try to prevent or remove their Existence: But such Opposition of ours always either consists in, or implies Opposition of our Wills.

'Tis manifest that all such like Words and Phrases, as vulgarly used, are used and accepted in this Manner. A Thing is said to be necessary, when we can't help it, let us do what we will. So any Thing is said to be impessible to us, when we would do it, or would have it brought to pass, and endeavour it; or at least may be supposed to desire and seek it; but all our Desires and Endeavours are, or would be vain. And that is said to be irresistible, which overcomes all our Opposition, Resistance, and Endeavour to the contrary. And we are to be said Unable to do a Thing, when our supposable Desires and Endeavours to do it are insufficient.

We are accustomed, in the common Use of Language, to apply and understand these Phrases in this Sense: We grow up with such a Habit; which by the daily Use of these Terms, in such a Sense, from our Childhood, becomes fix'd and settled; so that the Idea of a Relation to a supposed Will, Desire and Endeavour of ours, is strongly connected with these Terms, and naturally excited in our Minds, whenever we hear the Words used. Such Ideas, and these Words, are so united and associated, that they unavoidably go together; one suggests the other, and carries the other with it, and never can be separated as long as we live. And if we use the Words, as Terms of Art, in another Sense, yet, unless we are exceeding circumspect and wary, we shall insensibly slide into the vulgar Use of them, and so apply the Words in a very inconsistent Manner: this habitual Connection of Ideas will deceive and confound us in our Reasonings and Discourses, wherein we pretend to use these Terms in that Manner, as Terms of Art.

4. It follows from what has been observed, that when these Terms necessary, impossible, irresistill, unable, &c. are used in Cases wherein no Opposition, cr infufficient Willor Endeavour, is supposed, or can be supposed, but the very Nature of the supposed Case it self excludes, and denies any such Opposition, Willor Endeavour; these Terms are then not used in their proper Signification, but quite beside their Usein common Speech. The Reason is manifest; namely that in fuch Cases we can't use the Words with Reference to a supposable Opposition, Will or Eudeavour. And therefore if any Man uses these Terms in such Cases, he either uses them nonsensically, or in some new Sense, diverse from their original and proper Meaning. As for Instance; If a Man should affirm after this Manner, That it is necessary for a Man, and what must be, that a Man should chuse Virtue rather than Vice, during the Time that he prefers Virtue to Vice; and that it is a Thing impossible and irrefistable, that it should be otherwise than that he should have this Choice, so long as this Choice continues; fuch a Man would use the Terms must, irresistible, &c. with perfect Infignificence and Nonfense, or in some new Sense, diverse from their common Use; which is with Reference, as has been observed, to supposable Opposition, Unwillingness and Resistance; whereas, here, the very Supposition excludes and denies any 5. It appears from what has been faid, that these Terms necessary, impessible, &c. are often used by Philosophers and Metaphysicians in a Sense quite diverse from their common Use and original Signification: For they apply them to many Cases in which no Opposition is supposed or supposable. Thus they use them with Respect to God's Existence before the Creation of the World, when there was no other Being but He: so with regard to many of the Dispositions and Acts of the divine Being, such as his loving himself, his loving Righteousness, hating Sin, &c. So they apply these Terms to many Cases of the Inclinations and Actions of created intelligent Beings, Angels and Men; wherein all Opposition of the Will is shut out and denied, in the very Supposition of the Case.

Metaphysical or Philosophical Necessity is nothing different from their Certainty. I speak not now of the Certainty of Knowledge, but the Certainty that is in Things themselves, which is the Foundation of the Certainty of the Knowledge of them; or that wherein lies the Ground of the Infallibility of the Proposition which affirms them.

What is fometimes given as the Definition of Philosophical Necessity, namely, That by which a Thing cannot but be, or whereby it cannot be otherwise, fails of being a proper Explanation of it, on two Accounts: First, the Words Can, or Cannot, need Explanation as much as the Word Necessity; and the former may as well be explained by the latter, as the latter by the former. Thus, if any one asked us what we mean, when we say, a Thing cannot but be, we might explain our selves by saying, ing, we mean, it must nccessarily be so; as well as explain Necessity, by saying, it is that by which a Thing cannot but be. And Secondly, this Definition is liable to the fore-mention'd great Inconvenience: The Words cannot, or unable, are properly relative, and have Relation to Power exerted, or that may be exerted, in order to the Thing spoken of; to which, as I have now observed, the Word Necessity, as used by Philosophers has no Reference.

Philosophical Necessity is really Nothing else than the full and fix'd Connection between the Things fignified by the Subject and Predicate of a Propofition, which affirms Something to be true. When there is fuch a Connection, then the Thing affirmed in the Proposition is necessary, in a Philosophical Sense; whether any Opposition, or contrary Effort be fupposed, or supposable in the Case, or no. When the Subject and Predicate of the Proposition, which affirms the Existence of any Thing, either Substance, Quality, Act or Circumstance, have a full and certain Connection, then the Existence or Being of that Thing is faid to be necessary in a metaphyfical Sense. And in this Sense I use the Word Necessity, in the following Discourse, when I endeavour to prove that Necessity is not inconsistent? with Liberty.'

The Subject and Predicate of a Proposition, which affirms Existence of Something, may have a full, fix'd, and certain Connection several Ways.

(1.) They may have a full and perfect Connection in and of themselves; because it may imply a Contradiction, or gross Absurdity, to suppose them not connected. Thus many Things are necessary in their own Nature. So the eternal Existence of C. 4. Being

Being generally confidered, is necessary in itself: because it would be in itself the greatest Absurdity, to deny the Existence of Being in general, or to fay there was absolute and universal Nothing; and is as it were the Sum of all Contradictions; as might be shewn, if this were a proper Place for it. So God's Infinity, and other Attributes are neceffary. So it is necessary in it's own Nature, that two and two should be four; and it is necessary, that all right Lines drawn from the Center of a Circle to the Circumference should be equal. is necessary, fit and suitable, that Men should do to others, as they would that they should do to them. So innumerable Metaphyfical and Mathematical Truths are necessary in Themselves: The Subject and Predicate of the Proposition which affirms them, are perfectly connected of themselves.

- (2.) The Connection of the Subject and Predicate of a Proposition, which affirms the Existence of Something, may be fix'd and made certain, because the Existence of that Thing is already come to pass; and either now is, or has been; and so has as it were made fure of Existence. And therefore, the Proposition which affirms present and past Existence of it, may by this Means be made certain, and necessarily and analterably true; the past Event has fix'd and decided the Matter, as to it's Existence; and has made it impossible but that Existence should be truly predicated of it. Thus the Existence of whatever is already come to pass, now become necessary; 'tis become impossible should be otherwise than true, that such a Thing has been.
- (3.) The Subject and Predicate of a Propofition which affirms Something to be, may have a real and certain Connection consequentially; and fo the Existence of the Thing may be consequentially necessary; as it may be surely and firmly connected with something else, that is necessary in one of the former Respects. As it is either sully and thoroughly connected with that which is absolutely necessary in its own Nature, or with something which has already received and made sure of Existence. This Necessity lies in, or may be explained by the Connection of two or more Propositions one with another. Things which are perfectly connected with other Things that are necessary, are necessary Themselves, by a Necessity of Consequence.

And here it may be observed, that all Things which are future, or which will hereafter begin to be, which can be faid to be necessary, are necessary only in this last Way. Their Existence is not necessary in it self; for if so, they always would have existed. Nor is their Existence become neceffary by being made fure, by being already come to pass. Therefore, the only Way that any Thing that is to come to pass hereafter, is or can be neceffary, is by a Connection with fomething that is necessary in it's own Nature, or fomething that already is, or has been; fo that the one being fupposed, the other certainly follows. And this also is the only Way that all Things past, excepting those which were from Eternity, could be necessary before they came to pass, or could come to pass neceffarily; and therefore the only Way in which any Effect or Event, or any Thing whatfoever that ever has had, or will have a Beginning, has come into Being necessarily, or will hereafter necessarily exist. And therefore this is the Necessity which especially belongs to Controversies about the Acts of the Will.

It may be of some Use in these Controversies, further to observe concerning metaphysical Necessity, that that (agreable to the Distinction before observed of Necessity, as vulgarly understood) Things that exist may be faid to be necessary, either with a general or particular Necessity. The Existence of a Thing may be said to be necessary with a general Necessity, when all Things whatsoever being considered, there is a Foundation for Certainty of their Existence; or when in the most general and universal View of Things, the Subject and Predicate of the Proposition, which affirms its Existence, would appear with an infallible Connection.

An Event, or the Existence of a Thing, may be faid to be necessary with a particular Necessity, or with Regard to a particular Person, Thing or Time, when Nothing that can be taken into Confideration, in or about that Person, Thing or Time, alters the Case at all, as to the Certainty of that Event, or the Existence of that Thing; or can be of any Account at all, in determining the Infallibility of the Connection of the Subject and Predicate in the Proposition which assirms the Existence of the Thing; so that it is all one, as to that Person, or Thing, at least, at that Time, as if the Existence were necessary with a Necessity that is most univerfal and absolute. Thus there are many Things that happen to particular Persons, which they have no Hand in, and in the Existence of which no Will of theirs has any Concern, at least, at that Time; which, whether they are necessary or not, with Regard to Things in general, yet are necessary to them, and with Regard to any Volition of theirs at that Time; as they prevent all Acts of the Will about the Affair.—I shall have Occasion to apply this Observation to particular Instances in the following Discourse.—Whether the Things that are necessary with a particular Necessity, be not also necessary with a general Necessity, may. be a Matter of future Confideration,. Let that be as it will, it alters not the Case, as to the Use of this Distinction of the Kinds of Necessity.

These Things may be sufficient for the explaining of the Terms Necessary and Necessary, as Terms of Art, and as often used by Metaphysicians, and controversial Writers in Divinity, in a Sense diverse from, and more extensive than their original Meaning, in common Language, which was before explain'd.

What has been faid to shew the Meaning of the Terms Necessary and Necessary, may be sufficient for the Explaining of the opposite Terms, Impossible and Impossibility. For there is no Difference, but only the latter are negative, and the former positive. Impossibility is the same as negative Necessary, or a Necessary that a Thing should not be. And it is used as a Term of Art in a like Diversity from the original and vulgar Meaning, with Necessary.

The fame may be observed concerning the Words Unable and Inability. It has been observed, that these Terms, in their original and common Use, have Relation to Will and Endeavour, as supposable in the Case, and as 'insufficient for the bringing to pass the Thing will'd and endeavoured. But as these Terms are often used by Philosophers and Divines, especially Writers on Controversies about Free-Will, they are used in a quite different, and far more extensive Sense, and are applied to many Cases wherein no Will or Endeavour for the bringing of the Thing to pass, is or can be supposed, but is actually denied and excluded in the Nature of the Case.

As the Words necessary, impossible, unable, &c. are used by polemic Writers, in a Sense diverse from of natural and moral Necessity. Part I. from their common Signification, the like has happen'd to the Term Contingent. Any Thing is said to be contingent, or to come to pass by Chance or Accident, in the original Meaning of such Words, when its Connection with its Causes or Antecedents, according to the establish'd Course of Things, is not discerned; and so is what we have no Means of the Fore-sight of. And especially is any Thing said to be contingent or accidental with regard to us, when any Thing comes to pass that we are concerned in, as Occasions or Subjects, without our Foreknowledge, and beside our Design and Scope.

But the Word Contingent is abundantly used in a very different Sense; not for That whose Connection with the Series of Things we can't discern, so as to foresee the Event; but for something which has absolutely no previous Ground or Reason, with which it's Existence has any fix'd and certain Connection.

SECTION IV.

Of the Distinction of natural and moral Necessity, and Inability.

HAT Necessity which has been explain'd, consisting in an infallible Connection of the Things signified by the Subject and Predicate of a Proposition, as intelligent Beings are the Subjects of it, is distinguish'd into moral and natural Necessity.

I shall not now stand to enquire whether this Distinction be a proper and perfect Distinction; but shall only explain how these two Sorts of Necessity are understood, as the Terms are sometimes used,

Sect. IV. Of natural and moral Necessity. 29 used, and as they are used in the following Discourse.

The Phrase, moral Necessity, is used variously: sometimes 'tis used for a Necessity of moral Obli-So we fay, a Man is under Necessity, when he is under Bonds of Duty and Conscience, which he can't be discharged from. So the Word Necessity is often used for great Obligation in Point of Interest. Sometimes by moral Necessity is meant that apparent Connection of Things, which is the Ground of moral Evidence; and so is distinguish'd from absolute Necessity, or that fure Connection of Things, that is a Foundation for infallible Certainty. In this Sense, moral Necessity signifies much the same as that high Degree of Probability, which is ordinarily fufficient to fatisfy, and be relied upon by Mankind, in their Conduct and Behaviour in the World, as they would confult their own Safety and Interest, and treat others properly as Members of Society. And fometimes by moral Necessity is meant that Necessity of Connection and Confequence, which arises from such moral Causes, as the Strength of Inclination, or Motives, and the Connection which there is in many Cases between these, and such certain Volitions and Actions. And it is in this Sense, that I use the Phrase, moral Necessity, in the following Discourse.

By natural Necessity, as applied to Men, I mean fuch Necessity as Men are under through the Force of natural Causes; as distinguish'd from what are called moral Causes, such as Habits and Dispositions of the Heart, and moral Motives and Inducements. Thus Men placed in certain Circumstances, are the Subjects of particular Sensations by Necessity: They feel Pain when their Bodies are wounded; they see the Objects presented before them in a clear Light, when their Eyes are open'd: to they affent to the Truth of certain Propositions, as soon as the Terms are understood; as that two and two make four, that black is not white, that two parallel Lines can never cross one another: so by a natural Necessity Men's Bodies move downwards, when there is nothing to support them.

But here feveral Things may be noted concerning these two Kinds of Necessity.

1. Moral Necessity may be as absolute, as natural Necessity. That is, the Effect may be as perfectly connected with its moral Cause, as a natural neceffary Effect is with it's natural Caufe. Whether the Will in every Case is necessarily determined by the strongest Motive, or whether the Will ever makes any Resistance to such a Motive, or can ever oppose the strongest present Inclination, or not; if that Matter should be controverted, yet I suppose none will deny, but that, in some Cases, a previous Bias and Inclination, or the Motive prefented, may be so powerful, that the Act of the Will may be certainly and indisfolubly connected therewith. When Motives or previous Bias are very ftrong, all will allow that there is fome Difficulty in going against them. And if they were yet stronger, the Difficulty would be still greater. And therefore, if more were still added to their Strength, to a certain Degree, it would make the Difficulty fo great, that it would be wholly impoffible to furmount it; for this plain Reason, because whatever Power Men may be supposed to have to furmount Difficulties, yet that Power is not infinite; and fo goes not beyond certain Limits. If a Man can furmount ten Degrees of Disficulty of this Kind, with twenty Degrees of Strength, because the Degrees of Strength are beyond the Degrees of Difficulty; yet if the Difficulty be increased to thirty, or an hundred, or a thousand Degrees Sect. IV. Of natural and moral Necessity. 31 Degrees, and his Strength not also increased, his Strength will be wholly insufficient to surmount the Difficulty. As therefore it must be allowed, that there may be such a Thing as a sure and perfect Connection between moral Causes and Effects; so this only is what I call by the name of moral Necessity.

2. When I use this Distinction of moral and natural Necessity, I would not be understood to suppose, that if any Thing comes to pass by the former Kind of Necessity, the Nature of Things is not concerned in it, as well as in the latter. I don't mean to determine, that when a moral Habit or Motive is fo strong, that the Act of the Will infallibly follows, this is not owing to the Nature of Things. But these are the Names that these two Kinds of Necessity have usually been called by: and they must be distinguished by some Names or other; for there is a Distinction or Difference between them, that is very important in its Confequences. Which Difference does not lie fo much in the Nature of the Connection, as in the two Terms connected. The Cause with which the Effect is connected, is of a particular Kind; viz. that which is of a moral Nature; either some previous habitual Disposition, or some Motive exhibited to the Understanding. And the Effect is also of a particular Kind; being likewise of a moral Nature; confifting in fome Inclination or Volition of the Soul or voluntary Action.

I fuppose, that Necessity which is called natural, in Distinction from moral Necessity, is so called, because meer Nature, as the Word is vulgarly used, is concerned, without any Thing of Choice. The Word Nature is often used in Opposition to Choice; not because Nature has indeed never any Hand in 32 Of natural and moral Necessity. Part I. our Choice; But this probably comes to pass by Means that we first get our Notion of Nature from that discernable and obvious Course of Events, which we observe in many Things that our Choice has no Concern in; and especially in the material World; which, in very many Parts of it, we eafily perceive to be in a fettled Course; the stated Order and Manner of Succession being very apparent. But where we don't readily difcern the Rule and Connection, (tho' there be a Connection, according to an establish'd Law, truly taking Place) we fignify the Manner of Event by some other Name. Even in many Things which are feen in the material and inanimate World, which don't discernably and obviously come to pass according to any fettled Course, Men don't call the Manner of the Event by the Name of Nature, but by fuch Names as Accident, Chance, Contingence, &c. So Men make a Distinction between Nature and Choice; as tho' they were compleatly and universally distinct. Whereas, I suppose none will deny but that Choice, in many Cases, arises from Nature, as truly as other Events. But the Dependance and Connection between Acts of Volition or Choice, and itheir Causes, according to established Laws, is not so fensible and obvious. And we observe that Choice is as it were a new Principle of Motion and Action, different from that establish'd Law and Order of Things which is most obvious, that is seen especially in corporeal and fenfible Things; And also that Choice often interposes, interrupts and alters the Chain of Events in these external Objects, and causes 'em to proceed otherwise than they would do, if let alone, and left to go on according to the Laws of Motion among themselves. Hence it is spoken of as if it were a Principle of Motion entirely diffinct from Nature, and properly fet in Opposition to it. Names being commonly given to Things, according to what is most obvious, and is suggested by what appears to the Senses without Resection and Research.

3. It must be observed, that in what has been explain'd, as fignified by the Name of Moral Necessity, the Word Necessity is not used according to the original Design and Meaning of the Word: For, as was observed before, such Terms necessary, impossible, irresistible, &c. in common Speech, and their most proper Sense, are always relative; having Reference to some supposable voluntary Oppolition or Endeavour, that is infufficient. But no fuch Opposition, or contrary Will and Endeavour, is supposable in the Case of moral Necessity; which is a Certainty of the Inclination and Will it felf; which does not admit of the Suppolition of a Will to oppose and resist it. For tis abourd, to suppose the same individual Will to oppose it felf, in its present Act; or the present there to be opposite to, and resisting product Concer as abfurd as it is to talk of two contrary Medians, in the fame moving Body, at the fame Time. And therefore the very Case supposed never admits of any Trial, whether an opposing or resisting Will can overcome this Necessity.

What has been faid of natural and moral Necessity, may serve to explain what is intended by natural and moral Inchility. We are faid to be naturally unable to do a Thing, when we can't do it if we will, because what is most commonly called Nature don't allow of it, or because of some impeding Defect or Obstacle that is extrinsic to the Will; either in the Faculty of Understanding, Constitution of Body, or external Objects. Moral Inability consists not in any of these Things; but either in the Want of Inclination; or the Strength of a contrary Inclination; or the want of fufficient Motives in View, to induce and excite the Act of the Will, or the Strength of apparent Motives to the contrary. Or both these may be refolved into one; and it may be faid in one Word, that moral Inability confifts in the Opposition or Want of Inclination. For when a Person is unable to will or chuse such a Thing, through a Defect of Motives, or Prevalence of contrary Motives, 'tis the fame Thing as his being unable through the Want of an Inclination, or the Prevalence of a contrary Inclination, in fuch Circumstances, and under the Influence of such Views.

To give fome Inftances of this moral Inability.— A Woman of great Honour and Chastity may have a moral Inability to proftitute her felf to her Slave. A Child of great Love and Duty to his Parents, may be unable to be willing to kill his Father. A very lascivious Man, in Case of certain Opportunities and Temptations, and in the Abfence of fuch and fuch Restraints, may be unable to forbear gratifying his Luft. A Drunkard, under fuch and fuch Circumstances, may be unable to forbear taking of strong Drink. A very malicious Man may be unable to exert benevolent A&s to an Enemy, or to defire his Prosperity: Yea, some may be so under the Power of a vile Disposition, that they may be unable to love those who are most worthy of their Esteem and Affection. A strong Habit of Victue, and great Degree of Holiness may cause a moral Inability to love Wickedness in general, may render a Man unable to take Complacence in wicked Perfons or Things; or to chuse a wicked Life, and prefer it to a vertuous Life. And on the other Hand, a great Degree of habitual Wickedness may lay a Man under an Inability to love and choose Holiness; and render him utterly unable to love an infinitely holy Being, or to choose and cleave to him as his chief Good.

Here

Here it may be of Use to observe this Distinction of moral Inability, viz. of that which is general and babitual, and that which is particular and occasional. By a general and babitual moral Inability, I mean an Inability in the Fleart to all Exercifes or Acts of Will of that Nature or Kind, through a fix'd and habitual Inclination, or an habitual and flated Defect, or Want of a certain Kind of Inclination. Thus a very ill-natur'd Man may be unable to exert such Acts of Benevolence, as another, who is full of good Nature, commonly exerts; and a Man, whose Heart is habitually void of Gratitude, may be unable to exert fuch and fuch grateful Acts, through that stated Defect of a grateful Inclination. By particular and occasional moral Inability, I mean an Inability of the Will or Heart to a particular Act, through the Strength or Defect of present Motives, or of Inducements prefented to the View of the Understanding, on this Occasion .- If it be so, that the Will is always determined by the strongest Motive, then it must always have an inability, in this latter Sense, to act otherwise than it does; it not being possible, in any Case, that the Will should, at present, go against the Motive which has now, all Things confidered, the greatest Strength and Advantage to excite and induce it .--The former of these Kinds of moral Inability, confisting in that which is stated habitual and general, is most commonly called by the Name of Inability; because the Word Inability, in its most proper and original Signification, has Respect to fome flated Defect. And this especially obtains the Name of Inability also upon another Account:-I before observed, that the Word Inability in its original and most common Use, is a relative Term; and has Respect to Will and Endeavour, as supposable in the Case, and as insufficient to D_2 bring bring to pass the Thing desired and endeavoured. Now there may be more of an Appearance and Shadow of this, with Respect to the Acts which arise from a fix'd and strong Habit, than others that arise only from transient Occasions Causes. Indeed Will and Endeavour against, or diverse from present Acts of the Will, are in no Case supposable, whether those Acts be occasional or habitual; for that would be to suppose the Will, at prefent, to be otherwise than, at present, it is. But yet there may be Will and Endeavour against future Acts of the Will, or Volitions that are likely to take Place, as view'd at a Distance. 'Tis no Contradiction, to suppose that the Acts of the Will at one Time, may be against the Acts of the Will at another Time; and there may be Defires and Endeavours to prevent or excite future Acts of the Will; But fuch Defires and Endeavours are, in many Cases, rendered insufficient and vain, through Fixedness of Habit: When the Occasion returns, the Strength of Habit overcomes, and baffles all fuch Opposition. In this Respect, a Man may be in miserable Slavery and Bondage to a strong Habit. But it may be comparatively cafy to make an Alteration with Respect to fuch future Acts, as are only occasional and transient; because the Occasion or transient Cause. if foreseen, may often easily be prevented or avoided. On this Account, the moral Inability that attends fix'd Habits, especially obtains the Name of Inability. And then, as the Will may remotely and indirectly refift it felf, and do it in vain, in the Case of strong Habits; so Reason may resist present Acts of the Will, and it's Resistance be infufficient; and this is more commonly the Cafe also, when the Acts arise from strong Habit.

But it must be observed concerning moral Inability, in each Kind of it, that the Word Inability is used in a Sense very diverse from its original Import. The Word fignifies only a natural Inability, in the proper Use of it; and is applied to such Cases only wherein a present Will or Inclination to the Thing, with Respect to which a Person is said to be unable, is supposable. It can't be truly faid, according to the ordinary Use of Language, that a malicious Man, let him be never fo malicious, can't hold his Hand from striking, or that he is not able to fhew his Neighbour Kindness; or that a Drunkard, let his Appetite be never fo strong, can't keep the Cup from his Mouth. In the strictest Propriety of Speech, a Man has a Thing in his Power, if he has it in his Choice, or at his Election: And a Man can't be truly faid to be unable to do a Thing, when he can do it if he will. 'Tis improperly faid, that a Person can't persorm those external Actions, which are dependent on the Act of the Will, and which would be easily performed, if the Act of the Will were prefent. And if it be improperly faid, that he cannot perform those external voluntary Actions, which depend on the Will, 'tis in some Refpect more improperly faid, that he is unable to exert the Acts of the Will themselves; because it is more evidently false, with Respect to these, that he can't if he will: For to fay fo, is a down-right Contradiction: It is to fay, he can't will, if he does will. And in this Case, not only is it true, that it is easy for a Man to do the Thing if he will, but the very willing is the doing; when once he has will'd, the Thing is performed; and nothing else remains to be done. Therefore, in these Things to ascribe a Non-performance to the want of Power or Ability, is not just; because the Thing wanting is not a being able, but a being willing. \mathbf{D}_{3} willing. There are Faculties of Mind, and Capacity of Nature, and every Thing elfe, fufficient, but a Disposition: Nothing is wanting but a Will.

SECTION V.

Concerning the Notion of Liberty, and of moral Agency.

Words Freedom and Liberty, in common Speech, is Power, Opportunity, or Advantage, that any one has, to do as he pleafes. Or in other Words, his being free from Hindrance or Impediment in the Way of doing, or conducting in any Respect, as he wills. * And the contrary to Liberty, whatever Name we call that by, is a Person's being hinder'd or unable to conduct as he will, or being necessitated to do otherwise.

If this which I have mentioned be the Meaning of the Word Liberty, in the ordinary Use of Language; as I trust that none that has ever learn'd to talk, and is unprejudiced, will deny; then it will follow, that in Propriety of Speech, neither Liberty, nor it's contrary, can properly be ascribed to any Being or Thing, but that which has such a Faculty, Power or Property, as is called Will. For that which is possessed of no such Thing as Will, can't have any Power or Opportunity of doing according to it's Will, nor be necessitated to act contrary to its Will, nor be restrained from acting agreeably to it. And therefore to talk of Liberty, or the contrary, as belonging to the very Will it felf, is not to speak good Sense; if we judge of Senfe, and Nonfenfe, by the original and proper Signification of Words. For the Will it felf is not an Agent that bas a Will: The Power of choosing, it felf, has not a Power of choosing. That which has the Power of Volition or Choice is the Man or the Soul, and not the Power of Volition it felf. And he that has the Liberty of doing according to his Will, is the Agent or Doer who is possessed of the Will; and not the Will which he is possessed of. We say with Propriety, that a Bird let loofe has Power and Liberty to fly; but not that the Bird's Power of flying has a Power and Liberty of flying. To be free is the Property of an Agent, who is possessed of Powers and Faculties, as much as to be cunning, valiant, bountiful, or zealous. But these Qualities are the Properties of Men or Persons; and not the Properties of Properties.

There are two Things that are contrary to this which is called Liberty in common Speech. One is Constraint; the same is otherwise called Force, Compulsion, and Coaction; which is a Person's being necessitated to do a Thing contrary to his Will. The other is Restraint; which is his being hindred, and not having Power to do according to his Will. But that which has no Will, can't be the Subject of these Things .- I need say the less on this Head, Mr. Locke having fet the fame Thing forth, with fo great Clearness, in his Effay on the human Under-Standing.

But one Thing more I would observe concerning what is vulgarly called Liberty; namely, that Power and Opportunity for one to do and conduct as he will, or according to his Choice, is all that is meant by it; without taking into the Meaning of the Word, any Thing of the Cause or Original of that Choice; or at all considering how the Person came to have such a Volition; whether it was caused by some external Motive, or internal habitual Bias; whether it was determin'd by fome internal antecedent Volition, or whether it happen'd without a Cause; whether it was necessarily connected with fomething foregoing, or not connected. Let the Person come by his Volition or Choice how he will, yet, if he is able, and there is Nothing in the Way to hinder his purfuing and executing his Will, the Man is fully and perfectly free, according to the primary and common Notion of Freedom.

What has been faid may be fufficient to shew what is meant by Liberty, according to the com-mon Notions of Mankind, and in the usual and primary Acceptation of the Word: But the Word, as used by Arminians, Pelagians and others, who oppose the Calvinists, has an entirely different Signification.—These several Things belong to their Notion of Liberty. 1. That it consists in a Selfdetermining Power in the Will, or a certain Sovereignty the Will has over it felf, and it's own Acts, whereby it determines it's own Volitions; to as not to be dependent in it's Determinations, on any Caufe without it felf, nor determined by any Thing prior to it's own Acts. 2. Indifference belongs to Liberty in their Notion of it, or that the Mind, previous to the Act of Volition be, in equilibrio. 3. Contingence is another Thing that belongs and is effential to it; not in the common Acceptation of the Word, as that has been already explain'd, but as opposed to all Necessity, or any fixed and certain Connection with some previous Ground or Reason of it's Existence. They suppose the Essence of Liberty so much to consist in these Things, that unless the Will of Man be free free in this Sense, he has no real Freedom, how much soever he may be at Liberty to act according to his Will.

A moral Agent is a Being that is capable of those Actions that have a moral Quality, and which can properly be denominated good or evil in a moral Sense, virtuous or vicious, commendable or faulty. To moral Agency belongs a moral Faculty, or Sense of moral Good and Evil, or of such a Thing as Desert or Worthiness of Praise or Blame, Reward or Punishment; and a Capacity which an Agent has of being influenced in his Actions by moral Inducements or Motives, exhibited to the View of Understanding and Reason, to engage to a Conduct agreeable to the moral Faculty.

The Sun is very excellent and beneficial in it's Action and Influence on the Earth, in warming it, and causing it to bring forth it's Fruits; but it is not a moral Agent: It's Action, tho' good, is not vertuous or meritorious. Fire that breaks out in a City, and confumes great Part of it, is very mischievous in its Operation; but is not a moral Agent: what it does is not faulty or finful, or deferving of any Punishment. The brute Creatures are not moral Agents: the Actions of fome of them are very profitable and pleafant; others are very hurtful: yet, feeing they have no moral Faculty, or Sense of Desert, and don't act from Choice guided by Understanding, or with a Capacity of reasoning and reflecting, but only from Inflinct, and are not capable of being influenced by moral Inducements, their Actions are snot properly finful or vertuous; nor are they properly the Subjects of any fuch moral Treatment ment for what they do, as moral Agents are for their Faults or good Deeds.

Here it may be noted, that there is a circumstantial Difference between the moral Agency of a Ruler and a Subject. I call it circumstantial, because it lies only in the Difference of moral Inducements they are capable of being influenced by, arising from the Difference of Circumstances. A Ruler acting in that Capacity only, is not capable of being influenced by a moral Law, and it's Sanctions of Threatnings and Promises, Rewards and Punishments, as the Subject is; though both may be influenced by a Knowledge of moral Good and Evil. And therefore the moral Agency of the Supreme Being, who acts only in the Capacity of a Ruler towards his Creatures, and never as a Subject, differs in that Respect from the moral Agency of created intelligent Beings. God's Actions, and particularly those which he exerts as a moral Governour, have moral Qualifications, are morally good in the highest Degree. They are most perfectly holy and righteous; and we must conceive of Him as influenced in the highest Degree, by that which, above all others, is properly a moral Inducement; viz. the moral Good which He fees in such and such Things: And therefore He is, in the most proper Sense, a moral Agent, the Source of all moral Ability and Agency, the Fountain and Rule of all Vertue and moral Good; though by Reason of his being Supreme over all, 'tis not possible He should be under the Influence of Law or Command, Promifes or Threatnings, Rewards or Punishments, Counfels or Warnings. The effential Qualities of a moral Agent are in God, in the greatest possible Perfection; fuch as Understanding, to perceive the Difference between moral Good and Evil; a Capacity of difcerning that moral Worthiness and Demerit, Sect. V. and of moral Agency.

Demerit, by which fome Things are Praise-worthy, others deserving of Blame and Punishment; and also a Capacity of Choice, and Choice guided by Understanding, and a Power of acting according to his Choice or Pleasure, and being capable of doing those Things which are in the highest Sense Praise-worthy. And herein does very much consist that Image of God wherein he made Man, (which we read of Gen. I. 26, 27. and Chap. IX. 6.) by which God distinguished Man from the Beasts, viz. in those Faculties and Principles of Nature, whereby He is capable of moral Agency. Herein very much consists the natural Image of God; as his spiritual and moral Image, wherein Man was made at first, consisted in that moral Excellency, that he was endowed with.

PART II.

Wherein it is considered whether there is or can be any such Sort of Free-Dom of Will, as that wherein Arminians place the Essence of the Liberty of all moral Agents; and whether any such Thing ever was or can be conceived of.

SECTION I.

Shewing the manifest Inconsistence of the Arminian Notion of Liberty of Will, consisting in the Will's self-determining Power.

Aving taken Notice of those Things which may be necessary to be observed, concerning the Meaning of the principal Terms and Phrases made use of in Controversies concerning human Liberty, and particularly observed what Liberty is, according to the common Language, and general Apprehension of Mankind, and what it is as understood and maintained by Arminians; I proceed to consider the Arminian Notion of the Freedom of the Will, and the supposed Necessity of it in Order to moral Agency, or in Order to any One's being capable of Vertue or Vice, and properly the Subject of Command or Counsel, Praise or Blame, Promises or Threatnings, Rewards or Punishments; or whether that which has been described, as the Thing meant by Liberty in common Speech, be not sufficient, and the only Liberty, which makes, or can make any one a moral Agent, and so properly the Subject of these Things. In this Part, I shall consider whether any such Thing be possible or conceivable, as that Freedom of Will which Arminians insist on; and shall enquire whether any such Sort of Liberty be necessary to moral Agency, &c. in the next Part.

'And First of all, I shall consider the Notion of a Self-determining Power in the Will: wherein, according to the Arminians, does most essentially consist the Will's Freedom; and shall particularly enquire, whether it be not plainly absurd, and a manifest Inconsistence, to suppose that the II ill it self determines all the free Asis of the Will.

Here I shall not insist on the great Impropriety of such Phrases, and Ways of speaking, as the Will's determining it self; because Actions are to be ascribed to Agents, and not properly to the Powers of Agents; which improper Way of speaking leads to many Mistakes, and much Confusion, as Mr. Locke observes. But I shall suppose that the Arminians, when they speak of the Will's determining it felf, do by the Will mean the Soul willing. I shall take it for granted, that when they speak of the Will, as the Determine, they mean the Soul in the Exercise of a Power of Willing, or acting voluntarily. I shall suppose this to be their Meaning, because nothing else can be meant, without the grosselt and plainest Absurdity. In all Cases, when we speak of the Powers or Principles of Acting, as doing fuch Things, we mean that the Agents which have these Powers of acting, do them, in the Exercise of those Powers. So when we fay, Valour fights couragiously, we mean, the Man who is under the Influence of Valour fights courageously. When we fay, Love seeks the Object loved, we mean, the Perfon loving feeks that Object. When we fay, the Understanding discerns, we mean the Soul in the Exercise of that Faculty. So when it is faid, the Will decides or determines, the Meaning must be, that the Person in the Exercife of a Power of Willing and Chusing, or the Soul acting voluntarily, determines.

Therefore, if the Will determines all its own free Acts, the Soul determines all the free Acts of the Will in the Exercise of a Power of Willing and Chusing; or, which is the same Thing, determines them of Choice; it determines it's own Acts by chusing it's own Acts. If the Will determines the Will, then Choice orders and determines the Choice: and Acts of Choice are subject to the Decision, and follow the Conduct of other Acts of Choice. And therefore if the Will determines all it's own free Acts, then every free Act of Choice is determined by a preceeding Act of Choice, chusing that Act. And if that preceeding Act of the Will or Choice be also a free Act, then by these Principles, in this Act too, the Will is Self-determined: that is, this, in like Manner, is an Act that the Soul voluntarily chuses; or which is the fame Thing, it is an Act determined still by a preceeding Act of the Will, chufing that. And the like may again be observed of the last mentioned Act. Which brings us directly to a Contradiction: for it supposes an Act of the Will preceeding the first Act in the whole Train, directing and determining the rest; or a free free Act of the Will, before the first free Act of the Will. Or else we must come at last to an Act of the Will, determining the consequent Acts, wherein the Will is not self determined, and so is not a free Act, in this Notion of Freedom: But if the first Act in the Train, determining and sixing the rest, be not free, none of them all can be free; as is manifest at first View, but shall be demonstrated presently.

If the Will, which we find governs the Members of the Body, and determines and commands their Motions and Actions, does also govern it self, and determine it's own Motions and Actions, it doubtless determines them the same Way, even by antecedent Volitions. The Will determines which Way the Hands and Feet shall move, by an Act of Volition or Choice: and there is no other Way of the Will's determining, directing or commanding any Thing at all. Whatfoever the Will commands, it commands by an Act of the Will. And if it has itself under it's command, and determines it felf in it's own Actions, it doubtless does it the fame Way that it determines other Things which are under it's Command. So that if the Freedom of the Will confifts in this, that it has it felf and it's own Actions under it's Command and Direction, and it's own Volitions are determined by it felf, it will follow, that every free Volition arises from another antecedent Volition, directing and commanding that: And if that directing Volition be also free, in that also the Will is determined; that is to fay, that directing Volition is determined by another going before that; and fo on, 'till we come to the first Volition in the whole Series: And if that first Volition be free, and the Will felf-determined in it, then that is determined by another Volition preceeding that. Which is a ConContradiction; because by the Supposition, it can have none before it, to direct or determine it, being the first in the Train. But if that first Volition is not determined by any preceeding Act of the Will, then that Act is not determined by the Will, and so is not free, in the Arminian Notion of Freedom, which confifts in the Will's Self-determination. And if that first Act of the Will. which determines and fixes the subsequent Acts, be not free, none of the following Acts, which are determined by it, can be free.—If we suppose there are five Acts in the Train, the fifth and last determined by the fourth, and the fourth by the third, the third by the fecond, and the fecond by the first; If the first is not determined by the Will, and so not free, then none of them are truly determined by the Will: that is, that each of them are as they are, and not otherwife, is not first owing to the Will, but to the Determination of the first in the Series, which is not dependent on the Will, and is that which the Will has no Hand in the Determination of. And this being that which decides what the rest shall be, and determines their Existence; therefore the first Determination of their Existence is not from the Will. The Case is just the same, it instead of a Chain of five Acts of the Will, we should suppose a Succession of Ten, or an Hundred, or ten Thousand. If the first Act be not free, being determined by fomething out of the Will, and this determines the next to be agreeable to it felf, and that the next, and fo on; They are none of them free, but all originally depend on, and are determined by some Cause out of the Will: and so all Freedom in the Case is excluded, and no A& of the Will can be free, according to this Notion of Freedom. If we should suppose a long Chain, of ten Thoufand Links, so connected, that if the first Link moves, moves, it will move the next, and that the next; and fo the whole Chain must be determined to Motion, and in the Direction of it's Motion, by the Motion of the first Link; and that is moved by fomething elfe: In this Cafe, though all the Links, but one, are moved by other Parts of the fame Chain; yet it appears that the Motion of no One, nor the Direction of it's Motion, is from any Self-moving or Self-determining Power in the Chain, any more than if every Link were immediately moved by fomething that did not belong to the Chain. — If the Will be not free in the first Act, which causes the next, then neither is it free in the next, which is caused by that first Act: for the' indeed the Will caused it, yet it did not cause it freely; because the preceeding Act, by which it was caused, was not free. And again, if the Will ben't free in the fecond Act, fo neither can it be in the third, which is caused by that; because, in like Manner, that third was determined by an Act of the Will that was not free. And fo we may go on to the next Act, and from that to the next; and how long foever the Succession of Acts is, it is all one; if the first on which the whole Chain depends, and which determines all the rest, ben't a free Act, the Will is not free in causing or determining any one of those Acts; because the Act by which it determines them all, is not a free Act; and therefore the Will is no more free in determining them, than if it did not cause them at all. - Thus, this Arminian Notion of Liberty of the Will, confifting in the Will's Self-Determination, is repugnant to itself, and thurs itself wholly out of the World.

SECTION II.

Several supposed Ways of evading the foregoing Reasoning, considered.

F to evade the Force of what has been observed, it should be said, that when the Arminians speak of the Will's determining it's own Acts, they don't mean that the Will determines it's Acts by any preceding Act, or that one Act of the Will determines another; but only that the Faculty or Power of Will, or the Soul in the Use of that Power, determines it's own Volitions; and that it does it without any Act going before the Act determined; such an Evasion would be full of the most gross Absurdity.——I confess, it is an Evasion of my own inventing; and I don't know but I should wrong the Arminians, in supposing that any of them would make use of it. But it being as good a one as I can invent, I would observe upon it a few Things.

First, If the Faculty or Power of the Will determines an Act of Volition, or the Soul in the Use or Exercise of that Power, determines it, that is the same Thing as for the Soul to determine Volition by an Act of Will. For an Exercise of the Power of Will, and an Act of that Power, are the same Thing. Therefore to say, that the Power of Will, or the Soul in the Use or Exercise of that Power, determines Volition, without an Act of Will preceeding the Volition determined, is a Contradiction.

Secondly, If a Power of Will determines the Act of the Will, then a Power of Chufing determines it. For, as was before observed, in every Act of Will, there is Choice, and a Power of Willing is a Power of Chusing. But if a Power of Chusing determines the Act of Volition, it determines it by chusing it. For 'tis most absurd to say, that a Power of Chusing determines one Thing rather than another, without chusing any Thing. But if a Power of Chusing determines Volition by chusing it, then here is the Act of Volition determined by an antecedent Choice, chusing that Volition.

Thirdly, To fay, the Faculty, or the Soul, determines it's own Volition, but not by any Act, is a Contradiction. Because for the Soul to directi, decide, or determine any Thing, is to act; and this is supposed; for the Soul is here spoken of as being a Cause in this Affair, bringing something to pass, or doing something; or, which is the same Thing, exerting it self in order to an Effect, which Effect is the Determination of Volition, or the particular Kind and Manner of an Act of Will. But certainly, this Exertion or Action is not the same with the Effect, in order to the Production of which it is exerted; but must be something prior to it.

Again, The Advocates for this Notion of the Freedom of the Will, fpeak of a certain Sovereignty in the Will, whereby it has Power to determine it's own Volitions. And therefore the Determination of Volition must itself be an Act of the Will; for otherwise it can be no Exercise of that supposed Power and Sovereignty.

Again, If the Will determines it felf, then either the Will is affive in determining it's Volitions, or it is not., If it be affive in it, then the Determination nation is an All of the Will; and so there is one Act of the Will determining another. But if the Will is not active in the Determination, then how does it exercise any Liberty in it? These Gentlemen suppose that the Thing wherein the Will exercises Liberty, is in it's determining it's own Acts. But how can this be, if it ben't active in determining? Certainly the Will, or the Soul, can't enercise any Liberty in that wherein it don't act, or wherein it don't exercise it self. So that if either Part of this Dilemma be taken, this Scheme of Liberty, confifting in Self-determining Power, is overthrown. If there be an Act of the Will in determining all it's own free Acts, then one free Act of the Will is determined by another; and fo we have the Abfurdity of every free Act, even the very first, determined by a foregoing free Act. But if there be no Act or Exercise of the Will in determining it's own Acts, then no Liberty is exercifed in determining them. From whence it follows, that no Liberty confifts in the Will's Power to determine it's own Acts: Or, which is the fame Thing, that there is no fuch Thing as Liberty confifting in a Self-determining Power of the Will.

If it should be said, That altho' it be true, if the Soul determines it's own Volitions, it must be active in so doing, and the Determination it self must be an Act; yet there is no Need of supposing this Act to be prior to the Volition determined; But the Will or Soul determines the Act of the Will in Willing; It determines it's own Volition, in the very Act of Volition; It directs and limits the Act of the Will, causing it to be so and not otherwise, in exerting the Act, without any preceeding Act to exert that. If any should say after this Manner, they must mean one

one of these three Things: Either, (1.) That the determining Act, tho' it be before the Act determined in the Order of Nature, yet is not before it in Order of Time. Or (2.) That the determining Act is not before the Act determined, either in the Order of Time or Nature, nor is truly distinct from it; But that the Soul's determining the Act of Volition is the same Thing with it's exerting the Act of Volition: The Mind's exerting such a particular Act, is it's causing and determining the Act. Or, (3.) That Volition has no Cause, and is no Effect; but comes into Existence, with such a particular Determination, without any Ground or Reason of it's Existence and Determination.—I shall consider these distinctly.

(1.) If all that is meant, be, that the determining Act is not before the Act determined in Order of Time, it will not help the Case at all, tho' it should be allowed. If it be before the determin'd Act in the Order of Nature, being the Cause or Ground of it's Existence, this as much proves it to be distinct from it, and independent on it, as if it were before in the Order of Time. As the Caufe of the particular Motion of a natural Body in a certain Direction, may have no Diftance as to Time, yet can't be the same with the Motion effected by it, but must be as distinct from it, as any other Cause, that is before it's Effect in the Order of Time: as the Architect is diffinct from the House which he builds, or the Father distinct from the Son which he begets. And if the Act of the Will determining be distinct from the Act determined, and before it in the Order of Nature, then we can go back from one to another, 'till we come to the first in the Series, which has no Act of the Will before it in the Order of NaSupposed Evasions considered. Part II.

ture, determining it; and consequently is an Act not determined by the Will, and so not a free Act, in this Notion of Freedom. And this being the Act which determines all the Rest, none of them are free Acts. As when there is a Chain of many Links, the first of which only is taken hold of and drawn by Hand; all the rest may follow and be moved at the same Instant, without any Distance of Time; but yet the Motion of one Link is before that of another in the Order of Nature; the last is moved by the next, and that by the next, and so till we come to the first; which not being moved by any other, but by something distinct from the whole Chain, this as much proves that no Part is moved by any Self moving Power in the Chain, as if the Motion of one Link followed that of another in the Order of Time.

(2.) If any should say, that the determining Act is not before the determined Act, either in the Order of Time, or of Nature, nor is distinct from it; but that the Exertion of the Act is the Determination of the Act; That for the Soul to exert a particular Volition, is for it to cause and determine that Act of Volition: I would on this observe, that the Thing in Queston seems to be forgotten, or kept out of Sight, in a Darkness and Unintelligibleness of Speech; unless such an Objector would mean to contradict himself. The very Act of Volition it felf is doubtless a Determination of Mind; i. e. it is the Mind's drawing up a Conclusion, or coming to a Choice between two Things, or more, proposed to it. But determining among external Objects of Choice, is not the same with determining the Ast of Choice it felf, among various possible Acts of Choice. The Question is, What influences, directs, or determines the Mind or Will to come to fuch a ConConclusion or Choice as it does? or what is the Cause, Ground or Reason, why it concludes thus, and not otherwise? Now it must be answered, according to the Arminian Notion of Freedom, that the Will influences, orders and determines it self thus to Act. And if it does, I say, it must be by some antecedent Act. To say, it is caused, influenced and determined by something, and yet not determined by any Thing antecedent, either in Order of Time or Nature, is a Contradiction. For that is what is meant by a Thing's being prior in the Order of Nature, that it is some Way the Cause or Reason of the Thing, with Respect to which it is said to be prior.

If the particular Act or Exertion of Will, which comes into Exiftence, be any Thing properly determined at all, then it has fome Cause of its exifting, and of it's exifting in fuch a particular determinate Manner, and not another; fome Cause, whose Influence decides the Matter: which Cause is distinct from the Effect, and prior to it. But to fay, that the Will or Mind orders, influences and determines it felf to exert fuch an Act as it does, by the very Exertion it felf, is to make the Exertion both Caufe and Effect; or the exerting fuch an Act, to be a Cause of the Exertion of such an Act. For the Question is, What is the Cause and Reason of the Soul's exerting such an Act? To which the Answer is, the Soul exerts such an Act, and that is the Caufe of it. And fo, by this, the Exertion must be prior in the Order of Nature to it felf, and distinct from it felf.

(3.) If the Meaning be, that the Soul's Exertion of fuch a particular A& of Will, is a Thing that comes to pass of it felf, without any Cause; and that there is absolutely no Ground or Reason of the Soul's being determined to exert fuch a Volition, and make fuch a Choice, rather than another; I say, if this be the Meaning of Arminians, when they contend so earnestly for the Will's determining it's own Acts, and for Liberty of Will confishing in Self determing Power; they do nothing but confound Themselves and others with Words without a Meaning. In the Question, What determines the Will? and in their Answer, that the Will determines it self, and in all the Dispute about it, it feems to be taken for granted, that fomething determines the Will; and the Controversy on this Head is not, whether any Thing at all determines it, or whether it's Determination has any Cause or Foundation at all: But where the Foundation of it is, whether in the Will it felf, or somewhere else. But if the Thing intended be what is above-mention'd, then all comes to this, that Nothing at all determines the Will; Volition having absolutely no Cause or Foundation of it's Existence, either within, or without. There is a great Noise made about Selfdetermining Power, as the Source of all free Acts of the Will: But when the Matter comes to be explained, the Meaning is, that no Power at all is the Source of these Acts, neither Self-determining Power, nor any other, but they arise from Nothing; no Cause, no Power, no Influence, being at all concern'd in the Matter.

However, this very Thing, even that the free Acts of the Will are Events which come to pass without a Cause, is certainly implied in the Arminian Notion of Liberty of Will; tho' it be very inconfistent with many other Things in their Scheme, and repugnant to fome Things implied in their Notion of Liberty. Their Opinion implies, that the particular Determination of Volition tion is without any Cause; because they hold the free Acts of the Will to be Contingent Events; and Contingence is effential to Freedom in their Notion of it. But certainly, those Things which have a prior Ground and Reason of their particular Existence, a Cause which antecedently determines them to be, and determines them to be just as they are, don't happen contingently. If something foregoing, by a causal Insluence and Connection, determines and fixes precisely their coming to pass, and the Manner of it, then it don't remain a contingent Thing whether They shall come to pass or no.

And because it is a Question, in many Respects, very important in this Controversy about the Freedom of Will, Whether the free Ass of the Will are Events which come to pass without a Cause? I shall be particular in examining this Point in the two following Sections.

SECTION III.

Whether any Event what soever, and Volition in particular, can come to pass without a Cause of it's Existence.

EFORE I enter on any Argument on this Subject, I would explain how I would be understood, when I use the Word Cause in this Discourse: since, for want of a better Word, I shall have Occasion to use it in a Sense which is more extensive, than that in which it is sometimes used. The Word is often used in so restrained a Sense as to signify only that which has a positive Essiciency or Instuence to produce a Thing, or bring it to pass. But there are many Things which have no fuch positive productive Influence; which yet are Causes in that Respect, that they have truly the Nature of a Ground or Reason why some Things are, rather than others; or why they are as they are, rather than otherwise. Absence of the Sun in the Night, is not the Cause of the falling of the Dew at that Time, in the fame Manner as it's Beams are the Caufe of the Ascending of the Vapours in the Day-Time; and it's Withdrawment in the Winter, is not in the fame Manner the Cause of the Freezing of the Waters, as it's Approach in the Spring is the Cause of their Thawing. But yet the Withdrawment or Absence of the Sun is an Antecedent, with which these Effects in the Night and Winter are connected, and on which they depend; and is one Thing that belongs to the Ground and Reason why they come to pass at that Time, rather than at other Times; tho' the Absence of the Sun is Nothing positive, nor has any positive Influence.

It may be further observed, that when I speak of Connection of Causes and Effects, I have Respect to moral Causes, as well as those that are called natural in Distinction from 'em. Moral Causes may be Causes in as proper a Sense, as any Causes whatsoever; may have as real an Instuence, and may as truly be the Ground and Reason of an Event's coming to pass.

Therefore I fometimes use the Word Cause, in this Enquiry, to fignify any Antecedent, either natural or moral, positive or negative, on which an Event, either a Thing, or the Manner and Circumstance of a Thing, so depends, that it is the Ground and Reason, either in Whole, or in Part, why it is, rather than not; or why it is as it is, rather rather than otherwise; Or, in other Words, any Antecedent with which a consequent Event is so connected, that it truly belongs to the Reason why the Proposition which affirms that Event, is true; whether it has any positive Instuence, or not. And in an Agreableness to this, I sometimes use the Word Effest, for the Consequence of another Thing, which is perhaps rather an Occasion than a Cause, most properly speaking.

I am the more careful thus to explain my Meaning, that I may cut off Occasion, from any that might feek Occasion to cavil and object against some Things which I may say concerning the Dependance of all Things which come to pass, on some Cause, and their Connection with their Cause.

Having thus explain'd what I mean by Cause, I affert, that Nothing ever comes to pass without a Cause. What is Self-existent must be from Eternity, and must be unchangeable: But as to all Things that begin to be, they are not Self-existent, and therefore must have some Foundation of their Existence without themselves.—That whatsoever begins to be, which before was not, must have a Cause why it then begins to exist, seems to be the first Dictate of the common and natural Sense which God hath implanted in the Minds of all Mankind, and the main Foundation of all our Reasonings about the Existence of Things, past, present, or to come.

And this Dictate of common Sense equally respects Substances and Modes, or Things and the Manner and Circumstances of Things. Thus, if we see a Body which has hitherto been at Rest, start out of a State of Rest, and begin to move, we do as naturally and necessarily suppose there is fome Cause or Reason of this new Mode of Existence, as of the Existence of a Body it self which had hitherto not existed. And so if a Body, which had hitherto moved in a certain Direction, should suddenly change the Direction of its Motion; or if it should put offit's old Figure, and take a new one; or change it's Colour: the Beginning of these new Modes is a new Event, and the Mind of Mankind necessarily supposes that there is some Cause or Reason of them.

If this grand Principle of common Sense be taken away, all Arguing from Effects to Causes ceafeth, and fo all Knowledge of any Existence, besides what we have by the most direct and immediate Intuition. 'Particularly all our Proof of the Being of God ceases: We argue his Being from our own Being, and the Being of other Things, which we are fenfible once were not, but have begun to be; and from the Being of the World, with all it's constituent Parts, and the Manner of their Existence; all which we see plainly are not necessary in their own Nature, and so not Self-existent, and therefore must have a Cause. But if Things, not in themselves necessary, may begin to be without a Cause, all this arguing is vain.

Indeed, I will not affirm, that there is in the Nature of Things no Foundation for the Knowledge of the Being of God without any Evidence of it from his Works. I do suppose there is a great Absurdity, in the Nature of Things simply considered, in supposing that there should be no God, or in denying Being in general, and supposing an eternal, absolute, universal Nothing: And therefore that here would be Foundation of intuitive Evidence that it cannot be, and that eternal infinite most perfect Being must be; if we had Strength and Comprehension of Mind sufficient, to have a clear Idea of general and univerfal Being, or, which is the fame Thing, of the infinite, eternal, most perfect divine Nature and Effence. But then we should not properly come to the Knowledge of the Being of God by arguing; but our Evidence would be intuitive: We thould fee it, as we fee other Things that are necessary in themselves, the Contraries of which are in their own Nature abfurd and contradictory; as we fee that twice two is four; and as we see that a Circle has no Angles. If we had as clear an Idea of universal infinite Entity, as we have of these other Things, I suppose we should most intuitively see the Absurdity of supposing such Being not to be; should immediately see there is no Room for the Question, whether it is possible that Being, in the most general abstracted Notion of it, should not be. But we have not that Strength and Extent of Mind, to know this certainly in this intuitive independent Manner: But the Way that Mankind come to the Knowledge of the Being of God, is that which the Apostle speaks of, Rom. i. 20. The invisible Things of Him, from the Creation of the World, are clearly seen; being understood by the Things that are made; even his eternal Power and Godhead. We first escend, and prove à Posterieri, or from Effects, that there must be an eternal Cause; and then fecondly, prove by Argumentation, not Intuition, that this Being must be necessarily existent; and then thirdly, from the proved Necessity of his Existence, we may descend, and prove many of his Perfections à Prieri.

But if once this grand Principle of common Sense be given up, that what is not necessary in it felf, must have a Cause; and we begin to maintain, that that Things may come into Existence, and begin to be, which heretofore have not been, of themfelves, without any Cause; all our Means of ascending in our arguing from the Creature to the Creator, and all our Evidence of the Being of God, is cut off ar one Blow. In this Cafe, we can't prove that there is a God, either from the Being of the World, and the Creatures in it, or from the Manner of their Being, their Order, Beauty and Use. For if Things may come into Existence without any Cause at all, then they doubtless may without any Cause answerable to the Effect. Our Minds do alike naturally suppose and determine both these Things; namely, that what begins to be has a Cause, and also that it has a Cause proportionable and agreable to the Effect. The fame Principle which leads us to determine, that there cannot be any Thing coming to pass without a Cause, leads us to determine that there cannot be more in the Effect than in the Cause.

Yea, if once it should be allowed, that Things may come to pass without a Cause, we should not only have no Proof of the Being of God, but we should be without Evidence of the Existence of any Thing whatfoever, but our own immediately present Ideas and Consciousness. For we have no Way to prove any Thing elfe, but by arguing from Effects to Causes: from the Ideas now immediately in View, we argue other Things not immediately in View: from Senfations now excited in us, we infer the Existence of Things without us, as the Causes of these Sensations: And from the Existence of these Things, we argue other Things, which they depend on, as Effects on Causes. We infer the past Existence of our Selves, or any Thing else, by Memory; only as we argue, that the Ideas, which are now in our Minds.

Minds, are the Confequences of past Ideas and Senfations. We immediately perceive nothing else but the Ideas which are this Moment extant in our Minds. We perceive or know other Things only by Means of these, as necessarily connected with others, and dependent on them. But if Things may be without Caufes, all this necessary Connection and Dependence is diffolved, and to all Means of our Knowledge is gone. If there be no Abfurdity or Difficulty in supposing one Thing to flart out of Non-Existence, into Being, of it felf without a Cause; then there is no Absurdity or Difficulty in supposing the same of Millions of Millions. For Nothing, or no Difficulty multiplied, still is Nothing, or no Difficulty: Nothing multiplied by Nothing don't increase the Sum.

And indeed, according to the Hypothesis I am opposing, of the Acts of the Will coming to pass without a Cause, it is the Case in Fact, that Millions of Millions of Events are continually coming into Existence Contingently, without any Cause or Reason why they do so, all over the World, every Day and Hour, thro' all Ages. So it is in a constant Succession, in every moral Agent. This Contingency, this efficient Nothing, this effectual No-Cause, is always ready at Hand, to produce this Sort of Effects, as long as the Agent exists, and as often as he has Occasion.

If it were so, that Things only of one Kind, viz. Acts of the Will, seem'd to come to pass of Themselves; but those of this Sort in general came into Being thus; and it were an Event that was continual, and that happen'd in a Course, wherever were capable Subjects of such Events; this very Thing would demonstrate that there was some Cause of them, which made such a Difference between this Event and others, and that they did not really happen contingently. For Contingence is blind, and does not pick and choose for a particular Sort of Events. Nothing has no Choice. This No-Cause, which causes no Existence, can't cause the Existence which comes to pass, to be of one particular Sort only, distinguish'd from all others. Thus, that only one Sort of Matter drops out of the Heavens, even Water, and that this comes so often, so constantly and plentifully, all over the World, in all Ages, shows that there is some Cause or Reason of the falling of Water out of the Heavens; and that something besides meer Contingence has a Hand in the Matter.

If we should suppose Non-entity to be about to bring forth; and Things were coming into Exiftence, without any Caufe or Antecedent, on which the Existence, or Kind or Manner of Existence depends; or which could at all determine whether the Things should be; Stones, or Stars, or Beasts, or Angels, or human Bodies, or Souls, or only fome new Motion or Figure in natural Bodies, or fome new Senfations in Animals, or new Ideas in the human Understanding, or new Volitions in the Will; or any Thing else of all the infinite Number of Possibles; then certainly it would not be expected, altho' many Millions of Millions of Things are coming into Existence in this Manner, all over the Face of the Earth, that they should all be only of one particular Kind, and that it fhould be thus in all Ages, and that this Sort of Existences should never fail to come to pass where there is Room for them, or a Subject capable of them, and that conftantly, whenever there is Occasion for them.

If any should imagine, there is something in the Sort of Event that renders it possible for it to come into Existence without a Cause; and should fay, that the free Acts of the Will are Existences of an exceeding different Nature from other Things; by Reason of which they may come into Existence without any previous Ground or Reason of it, tho' other Things cannot; If they make this Objection in good Earnest, it would be an Evidence of their strangely forgetting themselves: For they would be giving an Account of some Ground of the Existence of a Thing, when at the fame Time they would maintain there is no Ground of it's Existence. Therefore I would obferve, that the particular Nature of Existence, be it never so diverse from others, can lay no Foundation for that Thing's coming into Existence without a Cause; because to suppose this, would be to suppose the particular Nature of Existence to be a Thing prior to the Existence; and so a Thing which makes Way for Existence, with such a Circumstance, namely without a Cause or Reason of Existence. But that which in any Respect makes Way for a Thing's coming into Being, or for any Manner or Circumstance of it's first Existence, must be prior to the Existence. The distinguish'd Nature of the Effect, which is fomething belonging to the Effect, can't have Influence backward, to act before it is. The peculiar Nature of that Thing called Volition, can do Nothing, can have no Influence, while it is not. And afterwards it is too late for it's Influence: for then the Thing has made fure of Existence already, without it's Help.

So that it is indeed as repugnant to Reason, to suppose that an Act of the Will should come into Existence without a Cause, as to suppose the human man Soul, or an Angel, or the Globe of the Earth, or the whole Universe, should come into Existence without a Cause. And if once we allow, that such a Sort of Effect as a Volition may come to pass without a Cause, how do we know but that many other Sorts of Effects may do so too? Tis not the particular Kind of Effect that makes the Absurdity of supposing it has Being without a Cause, but something which is common to all Things that ever begin to be, viz. that they are not Self-existient, or necessary in the Nature of Things.

SECTION IV.

Whether Volition can arise without a Cause, through the Activity of the Nature of the Soul.

HE Author of the Essay on the Freedom of the Will in God and the Creatures, in Answer to that Objection against his Doctrine of a Self-determining Power in the Will, (P. 68, 69.) That nothing is, or comes to pass, without a sufficient Reason why it is, and why it is in this Manner rather than another, allows that it is thus in corporeal Things, which are properly and philosophically speaking passive Beings; but denies that it is thus in Spirits, which are Beings of an active Nature, who have the Spring of Action within themselves, and can determine themfelves. By which it is plainly supposed, that such an Event as an Act of the Will, may come to pass in a Spirit, without a fufficient Reason why it comes to pass, or why it is after this Manner, rather than another; by Reason of the Activity of the Nature of a Spirit.—But certainly this Author.

Sect. IV. Volition not without a Caufe. thor, in this Matter, must be very unwary and inadvertent. For.

1. The Objection or Difficulty proposed by this Author, feems to be forgotten in his Answer or Solution. The very Difficulty, as he himfelf proposes it, is this; How an Event can come to pass without a sufficient Reason why it is, or why it is in this Manner rather than another? Instead of folving this Difficulty, or answering this Question with Regard to Volition, as he proposes, he forgets himself, and answers another Question quite diverse, and wholly inconsistent with this, viz. What is a fufficient Reason why it is, and why it is in this Manner rather than another? And he affigns the Active Being's own Determination as the Cause, and a Cause sufficient for the Effect; and leaves all the Difficulty unrefolved, and the Queftion unanswered, which yet returns, even, How the Soul's own Determination, which he speaks of, came to exist, and to be what it was without a Cause? The Activity of the Soul may enable it to be the Cause of Effects; but it don't at all enable or help it to be the Subject of Effects which have no Cause; which is the Thing this Author supposes concerning Acts of the Will. Activity of Nature will no more enable a Being to produce Effects, and determine the Manner of their Exiftence, within it felf, without a Caufe, than out of it felf, in some other Being. But if an active Being should, through it's Activity, produce and determine an Effect in some external Object, how abfurd would it be to fay, that the Effect was produced without a Cause!

2. The Question is not so much, How a Spirit endowed with Activity comes to act, as why it exerts such an Act, and not another; or why it acts with fuch a particular Determination? If Activity of Nature be the Cause why a Spirit (the Soul of Man for Instance) acts, and don't lie still; yet that alone is not the Cause why it's Action is thus and thus limited, directed and determined. Active Nature is a general Thing; 'tis an Ability or Tendency of Nature to Action, generally taken; which may be a Cause why the Soul acts as Occafion or Reason is given; but this alone can't be a fufficient Cause why the Soul exerts such a particular Act, at fuch a Time, rather than others. In order to this, there must be something besides a general Tendency to Action; there must also be a particular Tendency to that individual Action. If it should be asked, why the Soul of Man uses it's Activity in fuch a Manner as it does; and it should be answered, that the Soul uses it's Activity thus, rather than otherwise, because it has Activity; would fuch an Answer satisfy a rational Man? Would it not rather be looked upon as a very impertinent one?

3. An active Being can bring no Effects to pass by his Activity, but what are confequent upon his acting: He produces Nothing by his Activity, any other Way than by the Exercise of his Activity, and so Nothing but the Fruits of it's Exercile: He brings Nothing to pass by a dormant Activity. But the Exercise of his Activity is Action; and fo his Action, or Exercise of his Activity, must be prior to the Effects of his Activity. If an active Being produces an Effect in another Being, about which his Activity is conversant, the Effect being the Fruit of his Activity, his Activity must be first exercised or exerted, and the Effect of it must follow. So it must be, with equal Reason, if the active Being is his own Object, and his Activity is conversant about Himfelf, felf, to produce and determine some Effect in himself; still the Exercise of his Activity must go before the Effect, which he brings to pass and determines by it. And therefore his Activity can't be the Cause of the Determination of the first Action, or Exercise of Activity it self, whence the Effects of Activity arise; for that would imply a Contradiction; It would be to fay, the first Exercife of Activity is before the first Exercise of Activity, and is the Cause of it.

4. That the Soul, tho' an active Substance, can't diversify it's own Acts, but by first acting; or be a determining Cause of different Acts, or any different Effects, sometimes of one Kind, and fometimes of another, any other Way than in Consequence of it's own diverse Acts, is manifest by this; That if fo, then the fame Cause, the same caufal Power, Force or Influence, without Variation in any Respect, would produce different Effects at different Times. For the same Substance of the Soul before it acts, and the fame active Nature of the Soul before it is exerted (i. e. before in the Order of Nature) would be the Cause of different Effects, viz. different Volitions at different Times. But the Substance of the Soul before it acts, and it's active Nature before it is exerted, are the same without Variation. For 'tis fome Act that makes the first Variation in the Cause, as to any causal Exertion, Force or Influence. But if it be fo, that the Soul has no different Causality, or diverse causal Force or Influence, in producing these diverse Effects; then 'tis evident, that the Soul has no Influence, no Hand in the diverfity of the Effect; and that the Disference of the Effect can't be owing to any Thing in the Soul; or which is the fame Thing, the Soul don't determine the Diversity of the Effect; which is contrary to the Sup-

- Volition not without a Cause. Part II. Supposition.—'Tis true, the Substance of the Soul before it acts, and before there is any Difference in that Respect, may be in a different State and Circumstances: But those whom I oppose, will not allow the different Circumstances of the Soul to be the determining Causes of the Acts of the Will; as being contrary to their Notion of Self-determination and Self-motion.
- 5. Let us suppose, as these Divines do, that there are no Acts of the Soul, strictly speaking, but free Volitions; Then it will follow, that the Soul is an active Being in Nothing further than it is a voluntary or elective Being; and whenever it produces Effects actively, it produces Effects voluntarily and electively. But to produce Effects thus, is the same Thing as to produce Effects in Consequence of, and according to it's own Choice. And if so, then surely the Soul don't by it's Activity produce all it's own Acts of Will or Choice themselves: For this, by the Supposition, is to produce all it's free Acts of Choice voluntarily and electively, or in Confequence of it's own free Acts of Choice, which brings the Matter directly to the fore-mentioned Contradiction, of a free Act of Choice before the first free Act of Choice. - According to these Gentlemen's own Notion of Action, if there arises in the Mind a Volition without a free Act of the Will or Choice to determine and produce it, the Mind is not the active voluntary Cause of that Volition; because it don't arise from, nor is regulated by Choice or Defign. And therefore it can't be, that the Mind should be the active, voluntary, determining Cause of the first and leading Volition that relates to the Affair .-The Mind's being a designing Cause, only enables it to produce Effects in Consequence of it's Design; it will not enable it to be the defigning Caufe of all it's own Defigns. The Mind's being an elective Cause, will only enable it to produce Effects in Consequence of it's Elections, and according to them; but can't enable it to be the elective Cause of all it's own Elections; because that supposes an Election before the first Election. So the Mind's being an active Cause enables it to produce Effects in Consequence of it's own Acts, but can't enable it to be the determining Cause of all it's own Acts; for that is still in the same Manner a Contradiction; as it supposes a determining Act conversant about the first Act, and prior to it, having a causal Influence on it's Existence, and Manner of Existence.

I can conceive of Nothing else that can be meant by the Soul's having Power to cause and determine it's own Volitions, as a Being to whom God has given a Power of Action, but this; that God has given Power to the Soul, sometimes at least, to excite Volitions at it's Pleasure, or according as it chuses. And this certainly supposes, in all such Cases, a Choice preceeding all Volitions which are thus caused, even the first of them. Which runs into the fore-mentioned great Absurdity.

Therefore the Activity of the Nature of the Soul affords no Relief from the Difficulties which the Notion of a Self-determining Power in the Will is attended with, nor will it help, in the least, it's Absurdities and Inconsistences.

SECTION V.

Shewing, that if the Things afferted in these Evasions should be supposed to be true, they are altogether impertinent, and can't help the Cause of Arminian Liberty; And how (this being the State of the Case) Arminian Writers are obliged to talk inconsistently.

HAT was last observed in the preceeding Section may shew, not only that the active Nature of the Soul can't be a Reason why an Act of the Will is, or why it is in this Manner, rather than another; but also that if it could be so, and it could be proved that Volitions are contingent Events, in that Sense, that their Being and Manner of Being is not fix'd or determined by any Cause, or any Thing antecedent; it would not at all serve the Purpose of Arminians, to establish the Freedom of the Will, according to their Notion of it's Freedom, as confifting in the Will's Determination of it's felf; which supposes every free Act of the Will to be determined by some Act of the Will going before to determine it; in as much as for the Will to determine a Thing, is the same as for the Soul to determine a Thing by Willing; and there is no Way that the Will can determine an Act of the Will, than by willing that Act of the Will, or, which is the fame Thing, chufing it. So that here must be two Acts of the Will in the Case, one going before another, one conversant about the other, and the latter the Object of the former, and chosen by the former. If the Will don't cause and determine the Act by Choice, it don't cause or determine it at all; for that which is not determined by Choice, is not determined voluntarily or willingly: And to fay, that the Will determines fomething which the Soul don't determine willingly, is as much as to fay, that fomething is done by the Will, which the Soul don't do with it's Will.

So that if Arminian Liberty of Will, confisting in the Will's determining it's own Acts, be maintained, the old Absurdity and Contradiction must be maintained, that every free Act of Will is caused and determined by a foregoing free Act of Will. Which don't consist with the free Act's arising without any Cause, and being so contingent, as not to be fix'd by any Thing fore-going. So that this Evasion must be given up, as not at all relieving, and as that which, instead of supporting this Sort of Liberty, directly destroys it.

And if it should be supposed, that the Soul determines it's own Acts of Will some other Way, than by a foregoing Act of Will; still it will not help the Cause of their Liberty of Will. If it determines them by an Act of the Understanding, or some other Power, then the Will don't determine it self; and so the Self-determining Power of the Will is given up. And what Liberty is there exercised, according to their own Opinion of Liberty, by the Soul's being determined by something besides it's own Choice? The Acts of the Will, it is true, may be directed, and effectually determined and fix'd; but it is not done by the Soul's own Will and Pleasure: There is no Exercise at all of Choice or Will in producing the Effect: And if Will and Choice are not exercised in it, how is the Liberty of the Will exercised in it?

So that let Arminians turn which Way they please with their Notion of Liberty, consisting in the Will's determining it's own Acts, their No-tion destroys it self. If they hold every free Act of Will to be determined by the Soul's own free Choice, or foregoing free Act of Will; foregoing, either in the Order of Time, or Nature; it implies that gross Contradiction, that the first free Act belonging to the Affair, is determined by a free Act which is before it. Or if they say that the free Acts of the Will are determined by some other AET of the Soul, and not an AET of Will or Choice. This also destroys their Notion of Liberty, confifting in the Acts of the Will being determined by the Will it felf; or if they hold that the Acts of the Will are determined by Nothing at all that is prior to them, but that they are contingent in that Sense, that they are determined and fixed by no Cause at all; this also destroys their Notion of Liberty, confifting in the Will's determining it's own Acts.

This being the true State of the Arminian Notion of Liberty, it hence comes to pass, that the Writers that defend it are forced into gross Inconfishences, in what they say upon this Subject. To instance in Dr. Whithy; he in his Discourse on the Freedom of the Will, * opposes the Opinion of the Calvinists, who place Man's Liberty only in a Power of doing what He will, as that wherein they plainly agree with Mr. Hobbes. And yet he himself mentions the very same Notion of Liberty, as the Distate of the Sense and common Reason of Mankind, and a Rule laid down by the Light of Nature; viz. that Liberty is a Power of asting from our Selves, or DOING WHAT WE WILL. † This is indeed, as he fays, a Thing agreable to the Sense and common Reason of Mankind; and therefore 'tis not so much to be wondered at, that he unawares acknowledges it against himself: For if Liberty don't consist in this, what else can be devised that it should consist in? If it be said, as Dr. Whithy elsewhere insists, that it don't only confist in Liberty of doing what we will, but also a Liberty of willing without Necessity; still the Question returns, What does that Liberty of willing without Necessity consist in, but in a Power of willing as we please, without being impeded by a contrary Necessity? or in other Words, a Liberty for the Soul in it's willing to act according to it's own Choice? Yea, this very Thing the same Author seems to allow, and suppose again and again, in the Use he makes of Sayings of the Fathers, whom he quotes as his Vouchers. Thus he cites the Words of Origen, which he produces as a Testimony on his Side; # The Soul acts By HER OWN CHOICE, and it is free for her to incline to whatever Part SHE WILL. And those Words of Justin Martyr; § The Doctrine of the Christians is this, that Nothing is done or suffered according to Fate, but that every Man doth Good or Evil ACCORDING TO HIS OWN FREE CHOICE. And from Eusebius, these Words; | If Fate be establish'd, Philosophy and Piety are overthrown. All these Things depending upon the Necessity introduced by the Stars, and not upon Meditation and Exercise PROCEEDING FROM OUR OWN FREE CHOICE. And again, the Words of Maccarius; * God, to preserve the Liberty of Man's Will, suffered their Bodies to die, that it might be IN THEIR CHOICE to turn to Good or Evil. - They who are atted by the Holy Spirit, are not held under any Ne-

76 Arminians talk inconfishently. Part II. cessity, but have Liberty to turn themselves, and DO WHAT THEY WILL in this Life.

Thus, the Doctor in Effect comes into that very Notion of Liberty, which the Calvinists have; which he at the same Time condemns, as agreeing with the Opinion of Mr. Hobbes, namely, the Soul's acting by it's own Choice, Men's doing Good or Evil according to their own free Choice, Their being in that Exercise which proceeds from their own free Choice, Having it in their Choice to turn to Good or Evil, and doing what they will. So that if Men exercise this Liberty in the Acts of the Will themfelves, it must be in exerting Acts of Will as they will, or according to their own free Choice; or exerting Acts of Will that proceed from their Choice. And if it be fo, then let every one judge whether this don't suppose a free Choice going before the free Act of Will, or whether an Act of Choice don't go before that Act of the Will which proceeds from it. And if it be thus with all free Acts of the Will, then let every one judge, whether it won't follow that there is a free Choice or Will going before the first free Act of the Will exerted in the Case. And then let every one judge, whether this be not a Contradiction. And finally, let every one judge whether in the Scheme of these Writers there be any Possibility of avoiding these Abfurdities.

If Liberty confifts, as Dr. Whithy himself says, in a Man's doing what He will; and a Man exercises this Liberty, not only in external Actions, but in the Acts of the Will themselves; then so far as Liberty is exercised in the latter, it consists in willing what be wills: And if any say so, one of these two Things must be meant, either 1. That a Man has Power to will, as he does will; because what he wills, he wills; and therefore has Power to will what he has Power to will. If this be their Meaning, then all this mighty Controversy about Freedom of the Will and Self-determining Power, comes wholly to Nothing; all that is contended for being no more than this, That the Mind of Man does what it does, and is the Subject of what it is the Subject of, or that what is, is; wherein None has any Controversy with them. Or, 2. The Meaning must be, that a Man has Power to will as he pleases or chuses to will: That is, he has Power by one Act of Choice, to chuse another; by an antecedent Act of Will to chuse a consequent Act; and therein to execute his own Choice. And if this be their Meaning, it is nothing but shuffling with those they dispute with, and baffling their own Reason. For still the Question returns, wherein lies Man's Liberty in that antecedent Act of Will which chose the consequent Act. The Anfwer according to the same Principles must be, that his Liberty in this also lies in his willing as he would, or as he chose, or agreable to another Act of Choice preceeding that. And fo the Queftion returns in infinitum, and the like Answer must be made in infinitum: In order to support their Opinion, there must be no Beginning, but free Acts of Will must have been chosen by foregoing free Acts of Will, in the Soul of every Man, without Beginning; and so before he had a Being, from all Eternity.

SECTION VI.

Concerning the Will's determining in Things which are perfectly indifferent, in the View of the Mind.

A Great Argument for Self-determining Power, is the supposed Experience we universally have of an Ability to determine our Wills, in Cases wherein no prevailing Motive is presented: The Will (as is supposed) has it's Choice to make between two or more Things, that are perfectly equal in the View of the Mind; and the Will is apparently altogether indifferent; and yet we find no Difficulty in coming to a Choice; the Will can instantly determine it self to one, by a sovereign Power which it has over it self, without being moved by any preponderating Inducement.

Thus the forementioned Author of an Essay on the Freedom of the Will, &c. P. 25, 26, 27, supposes, "That there are many Instances, wherein the Will is determined neither by prefent Un-" eafinefs, nor by the greatest apparent Good, nor " by the last Dictate of the Understanding, nor " by any Thing elfe, but meerly by it felf, as a " fovereign Self-determining Power of the Soul; " and that the Soul does not will this or that Ac-"tion, in fome Cases, by any other Influence, " but because it will. Thus (fays he) I can turn " my Face to the South, or the North; I can " point with my Finger upward, or downward.-"And thus, in fome Cases, the Will determines " it felf in a very fovereign Manner, because it " will, without a Reason borrowed from the Un-" derstanding: and hereby it discovers it's own 66 perfect Power of Choice, rifing from within it " felf, Sect. VI. Of chusing in Things indifferent. 79 "felf, and free from all Influence or Restraint of "any Kind." And in Pages 66, 70, and 73, 74. This Author very expresly supposes the Will in many Cases to be determined by no Motive at all, and asts altogether without Motive, or Ground of Preserve.—Here I would observe,

1. The very Supposition which is here made, directly contradicts and overthrows it felf. For the Thing supposed, wherein this grand Argument consists, is, That among several Things the Will actually chuses one before another, at the same Time that it is perfectly indifferent; which is the very fame Thing as to fay, the Mind has a Preference, at the same Time that it has no Preference. What is meant can't be, that the Mind is indifferent before it comes to have a Choice, or 'till it has a Preference; or, which is the same Thing, that the Mind is indifferent until it comes to be not indifferent. For certainly this Author did not suppose he had a Controversy with any Person in supposing this. And then it is Nothing to his Purpose, that the Mind which chuses, was indifferent once; unless it chuses, remaining indifferent; for otherwise, it don't chuse at all in that Case of Indifference, concerning which is all the Question. Besides, it appears in Fact, that the Thing which this Author supposes, is not that the Will chuses one Thing before another, concerning which it is indifferent before it chuses; but also is indifferent when it chuses; and that it's being otherwise than indifferent is not 'till afterwards, in Consequence of it's Choice; that the chosen Thing's appearing preferable and more agreable than another, arises from it's Choice already made. His Words are (P. 30.) "Where the Objects " which are proposed, appear equally fit or good, "the Will is left without a Guide or Director;

" and therefore must take it's own Choice, by it's " own Determination; it being properly a Self-" determining Power. And in fuch Cases the "Will does as it were make a Good to it felf by " it's own Choice, i. e. creates it's own Pleasure " or Delight in this Self-chosen Good. Even as " a Man by feizing upon a Spot of unoccupied " Land, in an uninhabited Country, makes it his " own Poffession and Property, and as such re-"ioyces in it. Where Things were indifferent " before, the Will finds Nothing to make them " more agreable, confidered meerly in themselves; " but the Pleasure it feels ARISING FROM " IT'S OWN CHOICE, and it's Perseverance "therein. We love many Things which we " have chosen, AND PURELY BECAUSE " WE CHOSE THEM."

This is as much as to fay, that we first begin to prefer many Things, now ceasing any longer to be indifferent with Respect to them, purely because we have prefer'd and chosen them before.-These Things must needs be spoken inconsiderately by this Author. Choice or Preference can't be before it felf, in the same Instance, either in the Order of Time or Nature: It can't be the Foundation of it felf, or the Fruit or Consequence of it felf. The very Act of chusing one Thing rather than another, is preferring that Thing, and that is fetting a higher Value on that Thing. But that the Mind fets an higher Value on one Thing than another, is not, in the first Place, the Fruit of it's fetting a higher Value on that Thing.

This Author fays, P. 36. "The Will may be " perfectly indifferent, and yet the Will may de-" termine it felf to chuse one or the other." And again in the fame Page, "I am entirely in-" different " different to either; and yet my Will may de-termine it felf to chuse." And again, "Which " I shall chuse must be determined by the meer " Act of my Will." If the Choice is determined by a meer Act of Will, then the Choice is determined by a meer Act of Choice. And concerning this Matter, viz. that the Act of the Will it felf is determined by an Act of Choice, this Writer is express, in P. 72. Speaking of the Case, where there is no superiour Fitness in Objects prefented, he has these Words: "There it must act " by it's own CHOICE, and determine it felf as " it PLEASES." Where it is supposed that the very Determination, which is the Ground and Spring of the Will's Act, is an Act of Choice and Pleasure, wherein one Act is more agreable, and the Mind better pleased in it than another; and this Preference, and superiour Pleasedness is the Ground of all it does in the Cafe. And if fo, the Mind is not indifferent when it determines it felf, but had rather do one Thing than another, had rather determine it felf one Way than another. And therefore the Will don't act at all in Indifference; not fo much as in the first Step 10 takes, or the first Rife and Beginning of it's acting. If it be poffible for the Understanding to act in Indifference, yet to be fure the Will never does; because the Will's beginning to act is the very fame Thing as it's beginning to chuse or preser. And if in the very first Act of the Will, the Mind presers something, then the Idea of that Thing prefer'd, does at that Time preponderate, or prevail in the Mind; or, which is the fame Thing, the Idea of it has a prevailing Influence on the Will. So that this wholly destroys the Thing supposed, viz. That the Mind can by a fovereign Power chuse one of two or more Things, which in the View of the Mind are, in every Respect, perfectly equal, equal, one of which does not at all preponderate, nor has any prevailing Influence on the Mind above another.

So that this Author, in his grand Argument for the Ability of the Will to chuse one of two, or more Things, concerning which it is perfectly indifferent, does at the same Time, in Effect, deny the Thing he supposes, and allows and afferts the Point he endeavours to overthrow; even that the Will, in chusing, is subject to no prevailing Influence of the Idea, or View of the Thing chosen. And indeed it is impossible to offer this Argument without overthrowing it; the Thing supposed in it being inconsistent with it felf, and that which denies it felf. To suppose the Will to act at all in a State of perfect Indifference, either to determine it self, or to do any Thing elfe, is to affert that the Mind chuses without chusing. To say that when it is indifferent, it can do as it pleases, is to say that it can follow it's Pleasure, when it has no Pleasure to follow. And therefore if there be any Difficulty in the Instances of two Cakes, or two Eggs &c. which are exactly alike, one as good as another; concerning which this Author supposes the Mind in Fact has a Choice, and so in Effect supposes that it has a Preference; it as much concern'd Himfelf to folve the Difficulty, as it does those whom he opposes. For if these Instances prove any Thing to his Purpose, they prove that a Man chuses without Choice. And yet this is not to his Purpose; because if this is what he afferts, his own Words are as much against him, and do as much contradict him, as the Words of those he disputes against can do.

2. There is no great Difficulty in shewing, in such Instances as are alledged, not only that it must needs be so, that the Mind must be influenced in it's Choice by something that has a preponderating Insluence upon it, but also bow it is so. A little Attention to our own Experience, and a distinct Consideration of the Acts of our own Minds in such Cases, will be sufficient to clear up the Matter.

Thus, fuppofing I have a Chefs-board before me; and because I am required by a Superiour, or defired by a Friend, or to make fome Experiment concerning my own Ability and Liberty, or on fome other Consideration, I am determined to touch some one of the Spots or Squares on the Board with my Finger; not being limited or directed in the first Proposal, or my own first Purpose, which is general, to any one in particular; and there being nothing in the Squares in themfelves confidered, that recommends any one of all the fixty four, more than another: In this Case, my Mind determines to give it felf up to what is vulgarly called Accident *, by determining to touch that Square which happens to be most in View, which my Eye is especially upon at that Moment, or which happens to be then most in my Mind, or which I shall be directed to by some other suchlike Accident. Here are feveral Steps of the Mind's proceeding (tho' all may be done as it were in a Moment) the first Step is it's general Determination that it will touch one of the Squares. G_2

* I have elsewhere observed what that is which is vulgarly called Accident; That it is nothing akin to the Arminian metaphysical Notion of Contingence, something not connected with any Thing foregoing; But that it is something that comes to pass in the Course of Things, in some Affair that Men are concerned in, unforeseen, and not owing to their Design.

The next Step is another general Determination to give it felf up to Accident, in some certain Way; as to touch that which shall be most in the Eye or Mind at that Time, or to some other such-like Accident. The third and last Step is a particular Determination to touch a certain individual Spot, even that Square, which, by that Sort of Accident the Mind has pitched upon, has actually offered it felf beyond others. Now 'tis apparent that in none of these several Steps does the Mind proceed in absolute Indifference, but in each of them is influenced by a preponderating Inducement. So it is in the first Step; The Mind's general Determination to touch one of the fixty four Spots: The Mind is not absolutely indifferent whether it does fo or no: It is induced to it, for the Sake of making fome Experiment, or by the Defire of a Friend, or some other Motive that prevails. So it is in the fecond Step, The Mind's determining to give it felf up to Accident, by touching that which shall be most in the Eye, or the Idea of which shall be most prevalent in the Mind &c. The Mind is not absolutely indifferent whether it proceeds by this Rule or no; but chuses it, because it appears at that Time a convenient and requifite Expedient in order to fulfil the general Purpose aforesaid. And so it is in the third and last Step, It's determining to touch that individual Spot which actually does prevail in the Mind's View. The Mind is not indifferent concerning this; but is influenced by a prevailing Inducement and Reason; which is, that this is a Prosecution of the preceeding Determination, which appeared requifite, and was fix'd before in the fecond Step.

Accident will ever ferve a Man, without hindring him a Moment, in fuch a Cafe. It will always ways be fo among a Number of Objects in View, one will prevail in the Eye, or in Idea beyond others. When we have our Eyes open in the clear Sun-shine, many Objects strike the Eye at once, and innumerable Images may be at once painted in it by the Rays of Light; but the Attention of the Mind is not equal to feveral of them at once; or if it be, it don't continue fo for any Time. And so it is with Respect to the Ideas of the Mind in general: Several Ideas are not in equal Strength in the Mind's View and Notice at once; or at least, don't remain so for any sensible Continuance. There is nothing in the World more constantly varying, than the Ideas of the Mind: They don't remain precifely in the fame State for the least perceivable Space of Time: as is evident by this, That all perceivable Time is judged and perceived by the Mind only by the Succession or the fuccesfive Changes of it's own Ideas. Therefore while the Views or Perceptions of the Mind remain precifely in the fame State, there is no perceivable Space or Length of Time, because no sensible Succession at all.

As the Acts of the Will, in each Step of the fore-mentioned Proceedure, don't come to pass without a particular Cause, every Act is owing to a prevailing Inducement; fo the Accident, as I have called it, or that which happens in the unfearchable Course of Things, to which the Mind yields it felf, and by which it is guided, is not any Thing that comes to pass without a Cause; and the Mind in determining to be guided by it, is not determined by fomething that has no Caufe; any more than if it determined to be guided by a Lot, or the casting of a Die. For tho' the Die's falling in fuch a Manner be accidental to him that casts it, yet none will suppose that there is no G3 Caufe Cause why it falls as it does. The involuntary Changes in the Succession of our Ideas, tho' the Cause may not be observed, have as much a Cause, as the changeable Motions of the Motes that float in the Air, or the continual, infinitely various, fuccessive Changes of the Unevenesses on the Surface of the Water.

There are two Things especially, which are probably the Occasions of Confusion in the Minds of them who infift upon it, that the Will acts in a proper Indifference, and without being moved by any Inducement, in it's Determinations in such Cases as have been mentioned.

1. They feem to mistake the Point in Question, or at least not to keep it distinctly in View. The Question they dispute about, is, Whether the Mind be indifferent about the Objects presented, one of which is to be taken, touch'd, pointed to &c. as two Eggs, two Cakes, which appear equally good. Whereas the Question to be considered, is, Whether the Person be indifferent with Respect to his own Actions; whether he don't, on some Confideration or other, prefer one Act with Respect to these Objects before another. The Mind in it's Determination and Choice, in these Cases, is not most immediately and directly conversant about the Objects prefented; but the Atls to be done concerning these Objects. The Objects may appear equal, and the Mind may never properly make any Choice between them: But the next Act of the Will being about the external Actions to be performed, Taking, Touching &c. thefe may not appear equal, and one Action may properly be chosen before another. In each Step of the Mind's Progress, the Determination is not about the Objects, unless indirectly and improperly, but about the Actions, which it chuses for other

Sect. VI. Of chusing in Things indifferent. 87 other Reasons than any Preference of the Objects, and for Reasons not taken at all from the Objects.

There is no Necessity of supposing, that the Mind does ever at all properly chuse one of the Objects before another; either before it has taken, or afterwards. Indeed the Man chuses to take or touch one rather than another; but not because it chuses the Thing taken, or touch'd; but from foreign Considerations. The Case may be so, that of two Things offered, a Man may, for certain Reasons, chuse and prefer the taking of that which he undervalues, and chuse to neglect to take that which his Mind prefers. In fuch a Cafe, chusing the Thing taken, and chufing to take, are diverse: and fo they are in a Cafe where the Things prefented are equal in the Mind's Esteem, and neither of them preferred. All that Fact and Experience makes evident, is, that the Mind chuses one Action rather than another. And therefore the Arguments which they bring, in order to be to their Purpose, ought to be to prove that the Mind chuses the Action in perfect Indifference, with Respect to that Action; and not to prove that the Mind chuses the Action in perfect Indifference with Respect to the Object; which is very possible, and yet the Will not act at all without prevalent Inducement, and proper Preponderation.

2. Another Reason of Confusion and Difficulty in this Matter, seems to be, not distinguishing between a general Indifference, or an Indifference with Respect to what is to be done in a more distant and general View of it, and a particular Indifference, or an Indifference with Respect to the next immediate Act, view'd with it's particular and present Circumstances. A Man may be perfectly indifferent with Respect to his own Actions, in the former Respect; and yet not in the latter. Thus, in the foregoing Instance of touching one one of the Squares of a Chess-board; when 'tis first proposed that I should touch one of them, I may be perfectly indifferent which I touch; because as yet I view the Matter remotely and generally, being but in the first Step of the Mind's Progress in the Affair. But yet, when I am actually come to the last Step, and the very next Thing to be determined is, which is to be touch'd, having already determined that I will touch that which happens to be most in my Eye or Mind, and my Mind being now fix'd on a particular one, the Act of touching that, confidered thus immediately, and in these particular present Circumstances, is not what my Mind is absolutely indifferent about.

SECTION VII.

Concerning the Notion of Liberty of Will confifting in Indifference.

HAT has been faid in the foregoing Section, has a Tendency in some Measure to evince the Absurdity of the Opinion of such as place Liberty in Indifference, or in that Equilibrium whereby the Will is without all antecedent Determination or Bias, and left hitherto free from any prepossessing Inclination to one Side or the other; that the Determination of the Will to either Side may be entirely from it self, and that it may be owing only to it's own Power, and that Sovereignty which it has over it self, that it goes this Way rather than that *.

But

^{*} Dr. Whithy, and some other Arminians, make a Distinction of different Kinds of Freedom; one of God, and perfect.

But in as much as this has been of fuch long ftanding, and has been fo generally received, and fo much infifted on by Pelagians, Semi-Pelagians, Jefuits, Socinians, Arminians, and others, it may deferve a more full Confideration. And therefore I shall now proceed to a more particular and thorough Enquiry into this Notion.

Now left fome should suppose that I don't understand those that place Liberty in Indifference, or should charge me with misrepresenting their Opinion, I would signify, that I am sensible, there are some, who when they talk of the Liberty of the Will as consisting in Indisference, express themselves as tho' they would not be understood of the Indisference of the Inclination or Tendency of the Will, but of, I know not what, Indisference of the Soul's Power of Willing; or that the Will, with Respect to it's Power or Ability to chuse, is indisferent, can go either Way indisferently, either to

fect Spirits above; another of Persons in a State of Trial. The former Dr. Whithy allows to confift with Necessity; the latter he holds to be without Necessity: And this latter he supposes to be requisite to our being the Subjects of Praise or Dispraise, Rewards or Punishments, Precepts and Prohibitions, Promifes and Threats, Exhortations and Dehortations, and a Covenant-Treaty. And to this Freedom he supposes Indifference to be requisite. In his Discourse on the five Points, P. 299. 300, he says; " It is a Freedom (speaking of a Freedom not " only from Co-action, but from Necessity) requisite, as we " conceive, to render us capable of Trial or Probation, and to " render our Actions worthy of Praise or Dispraise, and our " Perfons of Rewards or Punishments." And in the next Page, speaking of the same Matter, He says, "Excellent to this Purpose, are the Words of Mr. Thorn ike: We fay mit, thu " Indefference is requisive to all Freedom, but to the Freedom of Mon " alone in this State of Trawail and Preficience: the Ground of " which is God's Tender of a Treaty, and Conditions of Peace and " Reconcilement to fallen Man, together with those Procepts and " Probibitions, the & Promifes and Threat; thefe Enhortations and " Debortations, it is enjoyeed with".

to the right Hand or left, either act or forbear to act, one as well as the other. Tho' this feems to be a Refining only of some particular Writers, and newly invented, and which will by no Means confift with the Manner of Expression used by the Defenders of Liberty of Indifference in general. And I wish fuch Refiners would thoroughly confider, whether they diffinctly know their own Meaning, when they make a Distinction between Indifference of the Soul as to it's Power or Ability of Willing or Chufing, and the Soul's Indifference as to the Preference or Choice it felf; and whether they don't deceive themselves in imagining that they have any distinct Meaning at all. The Indifference of the Soul as to it's Ability or Power to Will, must be the same Thing as the Indifference of the State of the Power or Faculty of the Will, or the Indifference of the State which the Soul it felf, which has that Power or Faculty, hitherto remains in, as to the Exercise of that Power, in the Choice it shall by and by make.

But not to infift any longer on the Abstruseness and Inexplicableness of this Distinction; let what will be supposed concerning the Meaning of them that make Use of it, thus much must at least be intended by Arminians, when they talk of Indifference as effential to Liberty of Will, if they intend any Thing, in any Respect to their Purpose, viz. That it is fuch an Indifference as leaves the Will not determined already; but free from actual Possession, and vacant of Predetermination, fo far, that there may be Room for the Exercise of the Self-determining Power of the Will; and that the Will's Freedom confilts in, or depends upon this Vacancy and Opportunity that is left for the Will it felf to be the Determiner of the Act that is to be the free Acr.

And

And here I would observe in the first Place, that to make out this Scheme of Liberty, the Indifference must be perfect and absolute; there must be a perfect Freedom from all antecedent Preponderation or Inclination. Because if the Will be already inclined, before it exerts it's own fovereign Power on it felf, then it's Inclination is not wholly owing to it felf: If when two Opposites are proposed to the Soul for it's Choice, the Proposal don't find the Soul wholly in a State of Indifference, then it is not found in a State of Liberty for meer Self-determination. The least Degree of antecedent Bias must be inconsistent with their Notion of Liberty. For fo long as prior Inclination possesses the Will, and is not removed, it binds the Will, fo that it is utterly impossible that the Will should act otherwise than agreably to it. Surely the Will can't act or chuse contrary to a remaining prevailing Inclination of the Will. To suppose otherwise, would be the same Thing as to suppose, that the Will is inclined contrary to it's present prevailing Inclination, or contrary to what That which the Will chuses and it is inclined to. prefers, that, all Things confidered, it preponderates and inclines to. It is equally impossible for the Will to chuse contrary to it's own remaining and prefent preponderating Inclination, as 'tis to prefer contrary to it's own present Preference, or chuse contrary to it's own present Choice. The Will therefore, so long as it is under the Influence of an old preponderating Inclination, is not at Liberty for a new free Act, or any Act that shall now be an Act of Self-determination. The Act which is a Self-determin'd free Act, must be an Act which the Will determines in the Poficifion and Use of such a Liberty, as confists in a Freedom from every Thing, which, if it were there, would make it impossible that the Will, at that 'Cime Time, should be otherwise than that Way to which it tends.

If any one should say, there is no Need that the Indifference should be perfect; but altho' a former Inclination and Preference still remains, yet, if it ben't very strong and violent, possibly the Strength of the Will may oppose and overcome it:—

This is grossly absurd; for the Strength of the Will, let it be never so great, does not at all enable it to act one Way, and not the contrary Way, both at the same Time. It gives it no such Sovereignty and Command, as to cause it self to prefer and not to prefer at the same Time, or to chuse contrary to it's own present Choice.

Therefore, if there be the least Degree of antecedent Preponderation of the Will, it must be perfectly abolished, before the Will can be at Liberty to determine it felf the contrary Way. And if the Will determines it felf the same Way, it was not a free Determination, because the Will is not wholly at Liberty in fo doing: It's Determina-tion is not altogether from it felf, but it was partly determined before, in it's prior Inclination: And all the Freedom the Will exercises in the Case, is in an Increase of Inclination, which it gives it self, over and above what it had by foregoing Bias; fo much is from it felt, and fo much is from perfect Indifference. For tho' the Will had a previous Tendency that Way, yet as to that additional Degree of Inclination, it had no Tendency. Therefore the previous Tendency is of no Confideration, with Respect to the Act wherein the Will is free. So that it comes to the fame Thing which was faid at first, that as to the Act of the Will, wherein the Will is fice, there must be perfect Indifference, or Equilibrium.

To illustrate this; If we should suppose a sovereign Self-moving Power in a natural Body: But that the Body is in Motion already, by an antecedent Bias; for Instance, Gravitation towards the Center of the Earth; and has one Degree of Motion already, by Vertue of that previous Tendency; but by it's felf-moving Power it adds one Degree more to it's Motion, and moves fo much more fwiftly towards the Center of the Earth than it would do by it's Gravity only: It is evident, that all that is owing to a felf-moving Power in this Case, is the additional Degree of Motion; and that the other Degree of Motion which it had from Gravity, is of no Confideration in the Cafe, don't help the Effect of the free felf-moving Power in the least; the Effect is just the same, as if the Body had received from it felf one Degree of Motion from a State of perfect Rest. So if we should suppose a felf-moving Power given to the Scale of a Balance, which has a Weight of one Degree beyond the opposite Scale; and we ascribe to it an Ability to add to it self another Degree of Force the fame Way, by it's felf-moving Power; This is just the same Thing as to ascribe to it a Power to give it felf one Degree of Preponderation from a perfect Equilibrium; and fo much Power as the Scale has to give it felf an Over-balance from a perfect Equipoife, so much self-moving self-preponderating Power it has, and no more. So that it's free Power this Way is always to be measured from perfect Equilibrium.

I need fay no more to prove, that, if Indifference be effential to Liberty, it must be perfect Indisserence; and that so far as the Will is destitute of this, so far it is destitute of that Freedom by which it is it's own Master, and in a Capacity of being it's own Determiner, without being at all passive, or subject to the Power and Sway of fomething elfe, in it's Motions and Determinations.

Having observed these Things, let us now try whether this Notion of the Liberty of Will confifting in Indifference and Equilibrium, and the Will's Self-determination in fuch a State, be not abfurd and inconfiftent.

And here I would lay down this as an Axiom of undoubted Truth; That every free AET is done in a State of Freedom, and not only after such a State. It an Act of the Will be an Act wherein the Soul is free, it must be exerted in a State of Freedom, and in the Time of Freedom. It will not fuffice, that the Act immediately follows a State of Liberty: but Liberty must yet continue, and co-exist with the Act; the Soul remaining in Possession of Liberty. Because that is the Notion of a free Act of the Soul, even an Act wherein the Soul uses or exercises Liberty. But if the Soul is not, in the very Time of the Act, in the Possession of Liberty, it can't at that Time be in the U/e of it.

Now the Question is, whether ever the Soul of Man puts forth an Act of Will, while it yet remains in a State of Liberty, in that Notion of a State of Liberty, viz. as implying a State of Indifference; or whether the Soul ever exerts an Act of Choice or Preference, while at that very Time the Will is in a perfect Equilibrium, not inclining one Way more than another. The very putting of the Question is sufficient to shew the Absurdity of the affirmative Answer: For how ridiculous would it be for any Body to infift, that the Soul chuses one Thing before another, when at the very fame Instant it is perfectly indifferent with Respect to each! This is the same Thing as to say, the Soul prefers one Thing to another, at the very fame Time that it has no Preference.----Choice and Preference can no more be in a State of Indifference, than Motion can be in a State of Rest, or than the Preponderation of the Scale of a Balance can be in a State of Equilibrium, Motion may be the next Moment after Rest; but can't co-exist with it, in any, even the least Part of it. So Choice may be immediately after a State of Indifference, but has no Co-existence with it: Even the very Beginning of it is not in a State of Indifference. And therefore if this be Liberty, no Act of the Will, in any Degree, is ever performed in a State of Liberty, or in the Time of Liberty. Volition and Liberty are fo far from agreeing together, and being effential one to another, that they are contrary one to another, and one excludes and destroys the other, as much as Motion and Rest, Light and Darkness, or Life and Death. So that the Will acts not at all, does not fo much as begin to act in the Time of fuch Liberty: Freedom is perfectly at an End, and has ceased to be, at the first Moment of Action; and therefore Liberty can't reach the Action, to affect, or qualify it, or give it a Denomination, or any Part of it, any more than if it had ceased to be twenty Years before the Action began. The Moment that Liberty ceases to be, it ceases to be a Qualification of any Thing. If Light and Darkness fucceed one another inflantaneously, Light qualifies Nothing after it is gone out, to make any thing lightfome or bright, any more at the first Moment of perfect Darkness, than Months or Years after. Life denominates Nothing vital at the first Moment of perfect Death. So Freedom, if it confifts in, or implies Indifference, can denominate nothing free, at the first Moment of Preference or Preponderation. Therefore 'tis manifest, that no Liberty which the Soul is poffened of, or ever uses, in any of it's Acts of Volition, confifts in Indifference; and that the Opinion of fuch as suppose, that Indifference belongs to the very Essence of Liberty, is to the highest Degree abfurd and contradictory.

Pre-

If any one should imagine, that this Manner of arguing is Nothing but Trick and Delufion; and to evade the Reafoning, should fay, that the Thing wherein the Will exercises it's Liberty, is not in the Act of Choice or Preponderation it felf, but in determining it felf to a certain Choice or Preference; That the Act of the Will wherein it is free, and uses it's own Sovereignty, confifts in it's caufing or determining the Change or Transition from a State of Indifference to a certain Preference, or determining to give a certain Turn to the Balance, which has hitherto been even; and that this Act the Will exerts in a State of Liberty, or while the Will yet remains in Equilibrium, and perfect Master of it self. - I say, if any One chuses to express his Notion of Liberty after this, or fome such Manner, let us see if he can make out his Matters any better than before.

What is afferted is, that the Will, while it yet remains in perfect Equilibrium, without Preference, determines to change it felf from that State, and excite in it felf a certain Choice or Preference. Now let us fee whether this don't come to the fame Abfurdity we had before. If it be fo, that the Will, while it yet remains perfectly Indifferent, determines to put it felf out of that State, and give it felf a certain Preponderation; Then I would enquire, whether the Soul don't determine this of Choice; or whether the Will's coming to a Determination to do fo, be not the fame Thing as the Soul's coming to a Choice to do fo. If the Soul don't determine this of Choice, or in the Exercise of Choice, then it don't determine it voluntarily. And if the Soul don't determine it voluntarily, or of it's own Will, then in what Sense does it's Will determine it? And if the Will don't determine it, then how is the Liberty of the Will exercised in the Determination? What Sort of Liberty is exercised by the Soul in those Determinations, wherein there is no exercise of Choice, which are not voluntary, and wherein the Will is not concerned? --- But if it be allowed, that this Determination is an Act of Choice, and it be infifted on, that the Soul, while it yet remains in a State of perfect Indifference, chuses to put it self out of that State, and to turn it felf one Way; then the Soul is already come to a Choice, and chuses that Way. And so we have the very same Abfurdity which we had before. Here is the Soul in a State of Choice, and in a State of Equilibrium, both at the fame Time: the Soul already chusing one Way, while it remains in a State of perfect Indifference, and has no Choice of one Way more than the other. --- And indeed this Manner of talking, tho' it may a little hide the Abfurdity, in the Obscurity of Expression, is more nonfenfical, and increases the Inconfistence. To fay, the free Act of the Will, or the Act which the Will exerts in a State of Freedom and Indifference, does not imply Preference in it, but is what the Will does in Order to causing or producing a Preserence, is as much as to fay, the Soul chuses (for to Will and to Chuse are the same Thing) without Choice, and prefers without Preference, in order to cause or produce the Beginning of a Preference, or the first Choice. And that is, that the first Choice is exerted without Choice, in order to produce it felf.

If any, to evade these Things, should own, that a State of Liberty, and a State of Indifference are not the fame, and that the former may be without the latter; But should fay, that Indifference is still essential to the Freedom of an Act of Will, in some Sort, namely, as 'tis necessary to go immediately before it; It being effential to the Freedom of an Act of Will that it should directly and immediately arise out of a State of Indisference: still this will not help the Cause of Arminian Liberty, or make it confiftent with it felf. For if the Act fprings immediately out of a State of Indifference, then it do's not arise from antecedent Choice or Preference. But if the Act arises directly out of a State of Indifference, without any intervening Choice to chuse and determine it, then the Ast not being determined by Choice, is not determined by the Will; the Mind exercises no free Choice in the Affair, and free Choice and free Will have no Hand in the Determination of the Act. Which is entirely inconfiftent with their Notion of the Freedom of Volition.

If any should suppose, that these Difficulties and Absurdities may be avoided, by saying, that the Liberty of the Mind consists in a Power to suspend the Act of the Will, and so to keep it in a State of Indifference, 'till there has been Opportunity for Consideration; and so shall say, that however Indisference is not essential to Liberty in such a Manner, that the Mind must make it's Choice in a State of Indisference, which is an Inconsistency, or that the Act of Will must spring immediately out of Indisference; yet Indisference may be essential to the Liberty of Acts of the Will in this Respect; viz. That Liberty consists in a Power of the Mind to forbear or suspend the Act of Volition, and keep 'to M' 2 State In-lifference for the present, 'till there has been Opportunity for proper Deliberation: I say, if any one imagines that this helps the Matter, it is a great Mistake: It reconciles no Inconsistency, and elieves no Dissibly which the Affair is attended ith. — For here the following Things must be bserved,

- 1. That this suspending of Volition, if there be roperly any such Thing, is it self an Act of Votion. If the Mind determines to suspend it's Act, it determines it voluntarily; it chuses, on ome Consideration, to suspend it. And this choice or Determination, is an Act of the Will: and indeed it is supposed to be so in the very typothesis; for 'tis supposed, that the Liberty of the Will consists in it's Power to do this, and hat it's doing it is the very Thing wherein the Vill exercises it's Liberty. But how can the Will xercise Liberty in it, if it ben't an Act of the Will? The Liberty of the Will is not exercised in any Thing but what the Will does.
- 2. This determining to suspend acting is not only an Act of the Will, but 'tis supposed to be the only free Act of the Will; because 'tis said, that this is the Thing wherein the Liberty of the Will consists. --- Now if this be so, then this is all the Act of Will that we have to consider in this Controversy, about the Liberty of Will, and in our Enquiries, wherein the Liberty of Man consists. And now the fore-mentioned Difficulties remain: the former Question returns upon us; viz. Wherein consists the Freedom of the Will in those Asts wherein it is free? And if this Act of determining a Suspension be the only Act in which the Will is free, then wherein consists the Will's Freedom with Respect to this Act of Suspension? H 2

And how is Indifference effential to this A&? The Answer must be, according to what is supposed in the Evafion under Confideration, That the Liberty of the Will in this Act of Suspension, consists in a Power to suspend even this Act, 'till there has been Opportunity for thorough Deliberation. But this will be to plunge directly into the groffest Nonsense: for 'tis the Act of Suspension it self that we are freaking of; and there is no Room for a Space of Deliberation and Suspension, in order to determine whether we will fuscend or no. For that fuppofes, that even Suspension it felf may be defer'd: Which is abfurd; for the very deferring the Determination of Suspension, to consider whether we will fuspend or no, will be actually suspending. For during the Space of Suspension, to confider whether to suspend, the Act is ipso fallo suspended. There is no Medium between suspending to act, and immediately acting; and therefore no Possibility of avoiding either the one or the other one Moment.

And befides, this is attended with ridiculous Abfurdity another Way: For now it is come to that, that Liberty confifes wholly in the Mind's having Power to fuspend it's Determination whether to fuspend of no; that there may be Time for Consideration, whether it be best to suspend. And if Liberty confifts in this only, then this is the Liberty under Confideration: We have to enquire now, how Liberty with Respect to this Act of fulpending a Determination of Sufpension, confifts in Indifference, or how Indifference is effential to it. The Answer, according to the Hypothesis we are upon, must be, that it consists in a Power of suspending even this last mentioned Act, to have Time to confider whether to suspend that. And then the same Difficulties and Enquiries return return over again with Respect to that; and so on forever. Which, if it would show any Thing, would show only that these is no such Thing as a free Act. It drives the Exercise of Freedom back in infinitum; and that is to drive it out of the World.

And besides all this, there is a Delusion, and a latent gross Contradiction in the Affair anoth r Way; in as much as in explaining how, or in what Respect the Will is free with Regard to a particular Act of Volition, 'tis faid, that it's Liberty confifts in a Power to determine to suspend that Ast, which places Liberty not in that Ast of Volition which the Enquiry is about, but altogether in another antecedent Act. Which contradicts the Thing supposed in both the Question and Answer. The Question is, wherein confists the Mind's Liberty in any particular Ast of Volition? And the Answer, in pretending to show wherein lies the Mind's Liberty in that AE, in Effect fays, it don't lie in that Act at all, but in another, viz. a Volition to suspend that AET. And therefore the Answer is both contradictory, and altogether impertinent and beside the Purpose. For it don't fhew wherein the Liberty of the Will confifts in the Act in Question; Instead of that, it supposes it don't confift in that Act at all, but in another distinct from it, even a Volition to suspend that Act, and take Time to confider of it. And no Account is pretended to be given wherein the Mind is free with Respect to that Act, wherein this Answer supposes the Liberty of the Mind irdeed confifts, viz. the Act of Sufpention, or or determining the Sufpenfion.

On the whole, 'tis exceeding manifest, that the Liberty of the Mind does not consist in Indianate H 3 rence, rence, and that indifference is not effential or necessary to 1., or at all Selonging to it, as the Armonau suppose; that Opinion being full of Nothing out Absardity and Self-Contradiction.

SECTION VIII.

Concerning the supposed Liberty of the Will, as opposite to all Necessity.

Its a Thing chiefly infifted on by Arminians, in this Controversy, as a Thing most important and essential in human Liberty, that Volitions, or the Acts of the Will, are contingent Events; understanding Contingence as opposite, not only to Constraint, but to all Necessity. Therefore I would particularly consider this Matter. And

r. I would enquire, whether there is, or can be any fuch Thing, as a Volition which is contingent in fuch a Sense, as not only to come to pass without any Necessity of Constraint or Co-action, but also without a Necessity of Consequence, or an infallible Connection with any Thing foregoing.

2. Whether, if it were fo, this would at all help the Cause of Liberty.

I. I would confider whether Volition is a Thing that ever does, or can come to pass, in this Manner, contingently.

And here it must be remembred, that it has been already shewn, that Nothing can ever come to pass without a Cause, or Reason why it exists in this Manner rather than another; and the Evidence of this has been particularly applied to the Acts

Sect. VIII. Of the supposed Liberty, &c. 103

Acts of the Will. Now if this be so, it will demonstrably follow, that the Acts of the Will are never contingent, or without Necessity, in the Sense spoken of; in as much as those Things which have a Cause, or Reason of their Existence, must be connected with their Cause. This appears by the following Considerations.

1. For an Event to have a Cause and Ground of it's Existence, and yet not to be connected with it's Cause, is an Inconsistence. For if the Event ben't connected with the Caufe, it is not dependent on the Cause; it's Existence is as it were loofe from it's Influence, and may attend it, or may not; it being a meer Contingence, whether it follows or attends the Influence of the Caufe, or not: And that is the same Thing as not to be dependent on it. And to fay, the Event is not dependent on it's Caufe, is abfurd: 'Tis the fame Thing as to fay, it is not it's Cause, nor the Event the Effect of it: For Dependence on the Influence of a Cause, is the very Notion of an Essed. If there be no fuch Relation between one Thing and another, confishing in the Connection and Dependence of one Thing on the Influence of another, then it is certain there is no fuch Relation between them as is fignified by the Terms Could and Effect. So far as an Event is dependent on a Cause, and connected with it, so much Causality is there in the Cafe, and no more. The Cauldoes, or brings to pals no more in any Event, than is dependent on it. If we fay, the Connection and Dependence is not total, but partial, and that the Effect, tho' it has some Connection and Dependence, yet is not entirely dependent on it; That is the fame Thing as to fay, that not all that is in the Event is an Effect of that Cause, but that only 11 4

- 2. If there are fome Events which are not neceffarily connected with their Causes, then it will follow, that there are fome Things which come to pass without any Cause, contrary to the Suppolition. For if there be any Event which was not necessarily connected with the Influence of the Cause under such Circumstances, then it was contingent whether it would attend or follow the Influence of the Cause, or no; It might have followed, and it might not, when the Cause was the fame, it's Influence the fame, and under the fame Circumstances. And if so, why did it follow, rather than not follow? There is no Caufe or Reaion of this. Therefore here is fomething without any Cause or Reason why it is, viz. the following of the Effect on the Influence of the Cause, with which it was not necessarily connected. If there be a necessary Connection of the Effect on any Thing antecedent, then we may suppose that fometimes the Event will follow the Cause, and femetimes not, when the Cause is the same, and in every Respect in the same State and Circumstances. And what can be the Cause and Reason of this strange Phenomenon, even this Diversity, that in one Instance, the Effect should follow, in another not? 'Tis evident by the Supposition, that this is wholly without any Caufe or Ground. Here is something in the present Manner of the Existence of Things, and State of the World, that is absolutely without a Cause. Which is contrary to the Supposition, and contrary to what has been before demonstrated.
- 3. To suppose there are some Events which have a Cause and Ground of their Existence, that vet are not necessarily connected with their Cause, is to suppose that they have a Cause which is not their Cause. Thus; If the Effect be not necesfarily connected with the Caufe, with it's Influence, and influential Circumstances; then, as I observed before, 'tis a Thing possible and supposable, that the Cause may sometimes exert the fame Influence, under the fame Circumstances, and yet the Effect not follow. And if this actually happens in any Instance, this Instance is a Proof, in Fact, that the Influence of the Cause is not fufficient to produce the Effect. For if it had been fufficient, it would have done it. And yet, by the Supposition, in another Instance, the same Cause, with perfectly the same Influence, and when all Circumstances which have any Influence, a e the same, it was followed with the Effect. By which it is manifest, that the Effect in this last Instance was not owing to the Influence of the Caufe, but must come to pass some other Way. For it was proved before, that the Influence of the Cause was not sufficient to produce the Effect. And if it was not fufficient to produce it, then the Production of it could not be owing to that Influence, but must be owing to fomething else, or owing to Nothing. And if the Effect be not owing to the Influence of the Caufe, then it is not the Caufe. Which brings us to the Contradiction, of a Cause, and no Cause, that which is the Ground and Reason of the Existence of a Thing, and at the fame Time is not the Ground and Reason of it's Existence, nor is sufficient to be fo.

If the Matter be not already fo plain as to render any further Reasoning upon it impertinent, I would fay, that that which feems to be the Caufe in the supposed Case, can be no Cause; it's Power and Influence having, on a full Trial, proved infusficient to produce such an Effect: and if it be not sufficient to produce it, then it don't produce To fay other is to fay, there is Power to do that which there is not Power to do. If there be in a Cause sufficient Power exerted, and in Circumstances sufficient to produce an Effect, and fo the Effect be actually produced at one Time; These Things all concurring, will produce the Effect at all Times. And so we may turn it the other Way; That which proves not fufficient at one Time, cannot be sufficient at another, with precifely the same influential Circumstances. And therefore if the Effect follows, it is not owing to that Cause; unless the different Time be a Circumstance which has Influence: But that is contrary to the Supposition; for 'tis supposed that all Circumstances that have Influence, are the same. And befides, this would be to suppose the Time to be the Cause; which is contrary to the Supposition of the other Thing's being the Cause. But if meerly Diversity of Time has no Influence, then 'tis evident that it is as much of an Absurdity to fay, the Cause was sufficient to produce the Effect at one Time, and not at another; as to fay, that it is sufficient to produce the Effect at a certain Time, and yet not sufficient to produce the same Effect at the same Time.

On the whole, it is clearly manifest, that every Essect has a necessary Connection with it's Cause, or with that which is the true Ground and Reason of it's Existence. And therefore if there be no Event without a Cause, as was proved before, then no Event whatsoever is contingent in the Manner that Arminians suppose the free Acts of the Will to be contingent.

SECTION IX.

Of the Connection of the Acts of the Will with the Dictates of the Understanding.

I T is manifest, that the Acts of the Will are none of them contingent in such a Sense as to be without all Necessity, or so as not to be necesfary with a Necessity of Consequence and Connection; because every Act of the Will is some Way connected with the Understanding, and is as the greatest apparent Good is, in the Manner which has already been explained; namely, that the Soul always wills or chuses that which, in the present View of the Mind, considered in the whole of that View, and all that belongs to it, appears most agreable. Because, as was observed before, Nothing is more evident than that, when Men act voluntarily, and do what they pleafe, then they do what appears most agreable to them; and to fay otherwise, would be as much as to affirm, that Men don't chuse what appears to suit them best, or what feems most pleasing to them; or that they don't chuse what they prefer. Which brings the Matter to a Contradiction.

And 'tis very evident in it felf, that the Acts of the Will have some Connection with the Dictates or Views of the Understanding, so this is allowed by some of the chief of the Arminian Writers: Particularly by Dr. Whitby and Dr. Samuel Clark.—Dr. Turnbull, tho' a great Enemy to the Doctaine of Necessity, allows the same Thing. In his Christian Philosophy (P. 196.) He with much Approbation cites another Philosopher, as of the same whiled, in these Words: "No Plan (says an excellent

108 Of the Connection of the Will Part II.

" cellent Philosopher) sets himself about any "Thing, but upon fome View or other, which " ferves him for a Reason for what he does; and " whatfoever Faculties he employs, the Under-" standing, with such Light as it has, well or ill " formed, constantly leads; and by that Light, true or false, all her operative Powers are directed. The Will it felf, how absolute and incontroulable foever it may be thought, never " fails in it's Obedience to the Dictates of the Understanding. Temples have their facred. "Images; and we fee what Influence they have " always had over a great Part of Mankind; But " in Truth, the Ideas and Images in Men's Minds " are the invisible Powers that constantly govern "then; and to these they all pay universally a

" ready Submission."
But whether this be in a just Confistence with themselves, and their own Notions of Liberty, I desire may now be impartially considered.

Dr. Whithy plainly supposes, that the Acts and Determinations of the Will always follow the Understanding's Apprehension or View of the greatest Good to be obtain'd, or Evil to be avoided; or in other Words, that the Determinations of the Will constantly and infallibly follow these two Things in the Understanding: 1. The Degree of Good to be obtained, and Evil to be avoided, proposed to the Understanding, and apprehended, viewed, and taken Notice of by it. 2. The Degree of the Understanding's View, Notice or Apprehension of that Good or Evil; which is increased by Attention and Confideration. That this is an Opinion he is exceeding peremptory in (as he is in every Opinion which he maintains in his Controverfy with the Calvinists) with Disdain of the contrary Opinion, as abfurd and felf-contradictory, will appear by the following Words of his, in his Difcourse on the five Points *.

" Now, 'tis certain, that what naturally makes "the Understanding to perceive, is Evidence proposed, and apprehended, considered or ad-" verted to: for Nothing else can be requisite to make us come to the Knowledge of the Truth. "Again, what makes the Will chuse, is some-thing approved by the Understanding; and confequently appearing to the Soul as Good. "And whatfoever it retufeth, is fomething re-" prefented by the Understanding, and so appearing to the Will, as Evil. Whence all that God " requires of us is and can be only this; to re-" fule the Evil, and chuse the Good. Where-" fore, to fay that Evidence proposed, apprehend-" ed and confidered, is not fufficient to make the " Understanding approve; or that the greatest "Good proposed, the greatest Evil threatned, " when equally believ'd and reflected on, " not fusficient to engage the Will to chuse the "Good and resuse the Evil, is in Effect to say, " that which alone doth move the Will to chuse or to " refuse, is not sufficient to engage it so to do; " which being contradictory to it felf, must of " Necessity be false. Be it then so, that we na-" turally have an Averfation to the Truths pro-" posed to us in the Gospel; that only can make " us indisposed to attend to them, but cannot " hinder our Conviction, when we do apprehend " them, and attend to them.—Be it, that there is " in us also a Renitency to the Good we are to " chuse; that only can indispose us to believe it " is, and to approve it as our chiefest Good. Be " it, that we are prone to the Evil that we should " decline; that only can render it the more difficult for us to believe it is the worst of Evils. But yet, what we do really believe to be our chiefest "Good, will still be chosen; and what we apprehend " to be the worst of Evils, will, whilst we do continue under that Conviction, be refused by us. It there-" fore can be only requifite, in order to these Ends, " that the good Spirit should so illuminate our " Understandings, that we attending to, and con-" fidering what lies before us, should apprehend, " and be convinced of our Duty; and that the " Bleffings of the Gospel should be so propounded " to us, as that we may differn them to be our " chiefest Good; and the Miseries it threateneth, " fo as we may be convinced that they are the " worst of Evils; that we may chuse the one, " and refuse the other."

Here let it be observed, how plainly and peremptorily it is afferted, that the greatest Good proposed, and the greatest Evil threatned, when equally believed and reflected on, is sussient to engage the Will to chuse the Good, and refuse the Evil, and is that alone which doth in move the Will to chuse or to refuse; and that it is contradictory to it self, to suppose otherwise; and therefore must of Necessity be false; and then what we do really believe to be our chiefest Good will still be chosen, and what we apprehend to be the worst of Evils, will. whilst we continue under that Conviction, be refused by us. Nothing could have been faid more to the Purpose, fully to fignify and declare, that the Determinations of the Will must ever more follow the Illumination, Conviction and Motice of the Understanding, with Regard to the greatest Good and Evil proposed, reckoning both the Degree of Good and Evil understood, and the Degree of Understanding, Notice and Conviction of that proposed Good and Evil; and that it is thus neceffarily, and can be otherwise in no Instance:

because it is afferted, that it implies a Contradiction, to suppose it ever to be otherwise.

I am fenfible, the Doctor's Aim in these Affertions is against the Calvinists; to shew, in Oppofition to them, that there is no Need of any playfical Operation of the Spirit of God on the Will, to change and determine that to a good Choice, but that God's Operation and Afflitance is only moral, suggesting Ideas to the Understanding; which he supposes to be enough, if those Ideas are attended to, infallibly to obtain the End. But whatever his Delign was, Nothing can more directly and fully prove, that every Determination of the Will, in chusing and refusing, is necessary; directly contrary to his own Notion of the Liberty of the Will. For if the Determination of the Will, evermore, in this Manner, follows the Light, Conviction and View of the Understanding, concerning the greatest Good and Evil, and this be that alone which moves the Will, and it be a Contradiction to suppose otherwise; then it is necessarily fo, the Will necessarily follows this Light or View of the Understanding, not only in some of it's Acts, but in every Act of chuling and refusing. So that the Will don't determine it self in any one of it's own Acts; but all it's Acts, every Act of Choice and Refufal, depends jon, and is necessarily connected with foline antecedent Cause; which Cause is not the Will it self, nor any Act of it's own, nor any Thing pertaining to that Faculty, but fomething belonging to another Faculty, whose Acts go before the Will, in all it's Acts, and govern and determine them every one.

Here, if it should be replied, that altho' it letrue, that according to the Doctor, he that Determination of the Will always depend upon, and fallibly connected with the Understanding's of the Connection of the Will Part II.

Conviction, and Notice of the greatest Good; yet the Acts of the Will are not necessary; because that Conviction and Notice of the Understanding is first dependent on a preceeding Act of the Will, in determining to attend to, and take Notice of the Evidence exhibited; by which Means the Mind obtains that Degree of Conviction which is sufficient and effectual to determine the consequent and ultimate Choice of the Will; and that the Will with Regard to that preceeding Act, whereby it determines whether to attend or no, is not necessary; and that in this, the Liberty of the Will consists, that when God holds forth sufficient objective Light, the Will is at Liberty whether to command the Attention of the Mind to it.

Nothing can be more week and inconfiderate than fuch a Reply as this. For that preceeding Act of the Will, in determining to attend and confider, still is an Att of the Will (it is so to be fure, if the Literty of the Will confifts in it, as is supposed) and it it be an Act of the Will, it is an Act of Charce or Refusal. And therefore, if what the Doctor afferts be true, it is determined by some antecedent Light in the Understanding concerning the greatest apparent Good or Evil. For he effects, it is that Light which alone doth move the Will to chuse or resule. And therefore the Will must be moved by that in chusing to attend to the objective Light offered, in order to another conseguent A& of Choice: so that this A& is no less necessary than the other. And if we suppose another Act of the Will, fill preceeding both these mention'd, to determine both, flill that also must be an A& of the Will, and an Act of Choice; and fo must, by the same Principles, be infallibly determin'd by some certain Degree of Light in the Understanding concerning the greatest Good. And

And let us suppose as many Acts of the Will, one preceeding another, as we please, yet they are every one of them necessarily determined by a certain Degree of Light in the Understanding, concerning the greatest and most eligible Good in that Case; and so, not one of them free according to Dr. Whithy's Notion of Freedom. And if it be faid, the Reason why Men don't attend to Light held forth, is because of ill Habits contracted by evil Acts committed before, whereby their Minds are indisposed to attend to, and confider of the Truth held forth to them by God, the Difficulty is not at all avoided: ftill the Question returns, What determined the Will in those preceeding evil Acts? It must, by Dr. Whithy's Principles, still be the View of the Understanding concerning the greatest Good and Evil. If this View of the Understanding be that alone which doth move the Will to chuse or refuse, as the Doctor asferts, then every Act of Choice or Refusal, from a Man's first Existence, is moved and determined by this View; and this View of the Understanding exciting and governing the Act, must be before the Act: And therefore the Will is necessarily determined, in every one of it's Acts, from a Man's first Existence, by a Cause beside the Will, and a Cause that don't proceed from, or depend on any Act of the Will at all. Which at once utterly abolishes the Doctor's whole Scheme of Liberty of Will; and he, at one Stroke, has cut the Sinews of all his Arguments from the Goodness, Righteoufness, Faithfulness and Sincerity of God, in his Commands, Promifes, Threatnings, Calls, Invitations, Exposulations; which he makes Use of, under the Heads of Reprobation, Election, Universal Redemption, sufficient and effectual Grace, and the Freedom of the Will of Man; and has enervated and made vain all those Excla114 Of the Connection of the Will Part II.

mations against the Doctrine of the Calvinists, as charging God with manifest Unrighteousness, Unfaithfulness, Hypocrify, Fallaciousness, and Cruelty; which he has over, and over, and over again, numberless Times in his Book.

Dr. Samuel Clark, in his Demonstration of the Being and Attributes of God, + to evade the Argument to prove the Necessity of Volition, from it's necessary Connection with the last Dictate of the Understanding, supposes the latter not to be diverse from the Act of the Will it felf. But if it be fo, it will not alter the Case as to the Evidence of the Necessity of the Act of the Will. If the Distate of the Understanding be the very same with the Determination of the Will or Choice, as Dr. Clark supposes, then this Determination is no Fruit or Effect of Choice: And if so, no Liberty of Choice has any Hand in it: As to Volition or Choice, it is necessary; That is, Choice can't prevent it. If the last Dictate of the Understanding be the fame with the Determination of Volition it felf, then the Existence of that Determination must be necessary as to Volition; in as much as Volition can have no Opportunity to determine whether it shall exist or no, it having Existence already before Volition has Opportunity to determine any Thing. It is it felf the very Rife and Existence of Volition. But a Thing, after it exifts, has no Opportunity to determine as to it's own Existence; it is too late for that.

If Liberty confifts in that which Arminians suppose, viz. in the Will's determining it's own Acts, having free Opportunity, and being without all Necessity; This is the same as to say, that Liberty consists in the Soul's having Power and Opportunity to have what Determinations of the Will it pleases or chuses. And if the Determinations of the Will, and the last Dictates of the Understanding be the same Thing, then Liberty consists in the Mind's having Power to have what Dictates of the Understanding it pleases, having Opportunity to chuse it's own Dictates of Understanding. But this is absurd; for it is to make the Determination of Choice prior to the Dictate of Understanding, and the Ground of it; which can't consist with the Dictate of Understanding's being the Determination of Choice it self.

Here is no Way to do in this Case, but only to recur to the old Absurdity, of one Determination before another, and the Caufe of it; and another before that, determining that; and fo on in infinitum. If the last Dictate of the Understanding be the Determination of the Will it felf, and the Soul be free with Regard to that Dictate, in the Arminian Notion of Freedom; then the Soul, before that Dictate of it's Understanding exists, voluntarily and according to it's own Choice determines, in every Case, what that Dicate of the Underflanding shall be; otherwise that Dictate, as to the Will, is necessary; and the Acts determined by it, must also be necessary. So that here is a Determination of the Mind prior to that Distate of the Understanding, an A& of Choice going before it, chusing and determining what that Dictate of the Understanding shall be: and this preceeding Act of Choice, being a free Act of Will, must also be the same with another last Dictate of the Understanding: And if the Mind also be free in that Dictate of Understanding, that must be determined still by another; and so on forever.

116 Of the Connection of the Will Part II.

Besides, if the Dictate of the Understanding, and Determination of the Will be the same, this confounds the Understanding and Will, and makes them the same. Whether they be the same or no, I will not now dispute; but only would observe, that if it be so, and the Arminian Notion of Liberty confifts in a Self-determining Power in the Understanding, free of all Necessity; being independent, undetermined by any Thing prior to it's own Acts and Determinations; and the more the Understanding is thus independent, and sovereign over it's own Determinations, the more free. By this therefore the Freedom of the Soul, as a moral Agent, must consist in the Independence of the Understanding on any Evidence or Appearance of Things, or any Thing whatsoever that stands forth to the View of the Mind, prior to the Understanding's Determination. And what Sort of Liberty is this! confifting in an Ability, Freedom and Eafinets of judging, either according to Evidence, or against it; having a sovereign Command over it felf at all Times, to judge, either agreably or difagreably to what is plainly exhibited to it's own View. Certainly, 'tis no Liberty that renders Persons the proper Subjects of perswasive Reasoning, Arguments, Expostulations, and fuch like moral Means and Inducements. The Use of which with Mankind, is a main Argument of the Arminians, to defend their Notion of Liberty without all Necessity. For according to this, the more free Men are, the lefs they are under the Government of fuch Means, less subject to the Power of Evidence and Reason, and more independent on their Influence, in their Determinations.

And whether the Understanding and Will are the same or no, as Dr. Clark seems to suppose, yet in order to maintain the Arminian Notion of Liberty without Necessity, the free Will is not determined by the Understanding, nor necessarily connected with the Understanding; and the further from fuch Connection, the greater the Freedom. And when the Liberty is full and compleat, the Determinations of the Will have no Connection at all with the Dictares of the Underflanding. And if fo, in vain are all the Applications to the Understanding, in order to induce to any free vertuous Act; and fo in vain are all Instructions, Counsels, Invitations, Expostulations, and all Arguments and Perswasives whatfoever: For these are but Applications to the Understanding, and a clear and lively Exhibition of the Objects of Choice to the Mind's View. But if, after all, the Will must be self-determined, and independent on the Understanding, to what Purpose are Things thus represented to the Understanding, in order to determine the Choice?

SECTION X.

Volition necessarily connected with the Influence of Motives; with particular Observations on the great Inconfistence of Mir. Chubb's Affertions and Reasonings, about the Freedom of the Will.

HAT every Act of the Will has some Cause, and consequently (by what has been already proved) has a necessary Connection with it's Cause, and so is necessary by a Necessity of Connection and Consequence, is evident by this, That every Act of the Will whatfoever, is excited by fome Motive: Which is manifest, because, if I 3 the Will or Mind, in willing and chusing after the Manner that it does, is excited so to do by no Motive or Inducement, then it has no End which it proposes to it self, or pursues in so doing; it aims at Nothing, and seeks Nothing. And if it feeks Nothing, then it don't go after any Thing, or exert any Inclination or Preference towards any Thing. Which brings the Matter to a Contradiction; Because for the Mind to will something, and for it to go after something by an Act of Preference and Inclination, are the same Thing.

But if every Act of the Will is excited by a Motive, then that Motive is the Cause of the Act of the Will. If the Acts of the Will are excited by Motives, then Motives are the Causes of their being excited; or, which is the same Thing, the Cause of their being put forth into Act and Existence. And if so, the Existence of the Acts of the Will is properly the Essect of their Motives. Motives do Nothing as Motives or Inducements, but by their Influence; and so much as is done by their Influence, is the Essect of them. For that is the Notion of an Essect, something that is brought to pass by the Influence or another Thing.

And if Volitions are properly the Effects of their Motives, then they are necessarily connected with their Motives. Every Effect and Event being, as was proved before, necessarily connected with that which is the proper Ground and Reason of it's Existence. Thus it is manifest, that Volition is necessary, and is not from any Self-determining Power in the Will: The Volition which is caused by previous Motive and Inducement, is not caused by the Will exercising a sovereign Power over it self, to determine, cause and excite Volitions Volitions in it felf. This is not confiftent with the Will's acting in a State of Indifference and Equilibrium, to determine it felf to a Preference; for the Way in which Motives operate, is by biaffing the Will, and giving it a certain Inclination or Preponderation one Way.

Here it may be proper to observe, that Mr. Chubb, in his Collection of Tracts on various Subjects, has advanced a Scheme of Liberty, which is greatly divided against it self, and thoroughly subversive of it self; and that many Ways.

I. He is abundant in afferting, that the Will, in all it's Acts, is influenced by Motive and Excitement; and that this is the previous Ground and Reason of all it's Acts, and that it is never otherwife in any Instance. He fays, (P. 262.) No Action can take Place without some Motive to excite it. And in P. 263. Volition cannot take Place without some PREVIOUS Reason or Motive to induce it. And in P. 310. Action would not take Place without some Reason or Motive to induce it; it being absurd to suppose, that the active Faculty would be exerted without fome PREVIOUS Reason to dispose the Mind to Action. So also P. 257. And he speaks of these Things as what we may be absolutely certain of, and which are the Foundation, the only Founda-tion we have of a Certainty of the moral Perfections of God. P. 252, 253, 254, 255, 261, 262, 263, 264.

And yet at the same Time, by his Scheme, the Influence of Motives upon us to excite to Action, and to be actually a Ground of Volition, is confequent on the Volition or Choice of the Mind. For he very greatly insifts upon it, that in all free Actions, before the Mind is the Subject of those Volitions which Motives excite, it chuses to be fo. It chuses whether it will comply with the Motive, which prefents it felf in View, or not; and when various Motives are presented, it chuses which it will yield to, and which it will reject. So P. 256. Every Man has Power to act, or to refrain from acting agreably with, or contrary to, any Motive that tresents. P. 257. Every Man is at Liberty to all, or refrain from acting agreably with, or contrary to, what each of these Motives, considered singly, would excite kim to. - Man has Power, and is as much at Liherty to rejest the Motive that dees prevail, as he has Power, and is at Liberty, to reject those Motives that do not. And fo P. 310, 311. In order to constitute a moral Agent, it is necessary, that he should have Power to act, or to refrain from acting, upon such moral Motives as he pleases. And to the like Purpose in many other Places. According to these Things, the Will acts first, and chuses or refuses to comply with the Motive that is presented, before it falls under it's prevailing Influence: And 'tis first determined by the Mind's Pleafure or Choice, what Motives it will be induced by, before it is induced by them.

Now, how can these Things hang together? How can the Mind first act, and by it's Act of Folition and Choice determine what Motives shall be the Ground and Reason of it's Volition and Choice? For this supposes, the Choice is already made, before the Motive has it's Effect; and that the Volition is already exerted, before the Motive prevails, so as actually to be the Ground of the Volition; and makes the prevailing of the Motive, the Consequence of the Volition, which yet it is the Ground of. If the Mind has already chosen to comply with a Motive, and to yield to it's Excitement, it don't need to yield to it after this:

this: for the Thing is effected already, that the Motive would excite to, and the Will is beforehand with the Excitement; and the Excitement comes in too late, and is needless and in vain afterwards. If the Mind has already chosen to yield to a Motive which invites to a Thing, that implies and in Fact is a chusing the Thing invited to; and. the very Act of Choice is before the Influence of the Motive which induces, and is the Ground of the Choice; the Son is before-hand with the Father that begets him: The Choice is supposed to be the Ground of that Influence of the Motive, which very Influence is supposed to be the Ground of the Choice. And so Vice versa, The Choice is supposed to be the Consequence of the Influence of the Motive, which Influence of the Motive is the Confequence of that very Choice.

And besides, if the Will acts first towards the Motive before it falls under it's Influence, and the prevailing of the Motive upon it to induce it to act and chuse, be the Fruit and Consequence of it's Act and Choice, then how is the Motive a PREVIOUS Ground and Reason of the Act and Choice, so that in the Nature of the Things, Volition cannot take Place without some PREVIOUS Reason and Motive to induce it; and that this Act is consequent upon, and follows the Motive? Which Things Mr. Chubb often asserts, as of certain and undoubted Truth. So that the very same Motive is both previous and consequent, both before and after, both the Ground and Fruit of the very same Thing!

II. Agreable to the fore-mention'd inconfiftent Notion of the Will's first acting towards the Motive, chusing whether it will comply with it, in order to it's becoming a Ground of the Will's acting, acting, before any Act of Volition can take Place, Mr. Chubb frequently calls Motives and Excitements to the Action of the Will, the paffive Ground or Reason of that Action. Which is a remarkable Phrase; than which I presume there is none more unintelligible, and void of diffinct and confiftent Meaning, in all the Writings of Duns, Scotus, or Thomas Aquinas. When he represents the Motive to Action or Volition as passive, he must mean passive in that Affair, or passive with Respect to that Action which he speaks of; otherwise it is Nothing to his Purpose, or relating to the Design of his Argument: He must mean (if that can be called a Meaning) that the Motive to Volition is first acted upon or towards by the Volition, chusing to yield to it, making it a Ground of Action, or determining to fetch it's Influence from thence; and fo to make it a previous Ground of it's own Excitation and Existence. Which is the same Abfurdity, as if one should say, that the Soul of Man, or any other Thing should, previous to it's existing, chuse what Cause it would come into Existence by, and should act upon it's Cause, to fetch Influence from thence, to bring it into Being; and so it's Cause should be a passive Ground of it's Existence!

Mr. Chubb does very plainly suppose Motive or Excitement to be the Ground of the Being of Volition. He speaks of it as the Ground or Reason of the EXERTION of an Act of the Will, P. 391, and 392. and expressly says, that Volition cannot TAKE PLACE without some previous Ground or Motive to induce it, P. 363. And he speaks of the Act as FROM the Motive, and FROM THE INFLUENCE of the Motive, P. 352. and from the Insluence that the Motive has on the Man, for the PRODUCTION of an Action. P. 317. Certainly, tainly, there is no Need of multiplying Words about this; 'Tis easily judged, whether Motive can be the Ground of Volition's being exerted and taking Place, so that the very Production of it is from the Influence of the Motive, and yet the Motive, before it becomes the Ground of the Volition, is passive, or acted upon by the Volition. But this I will say, That a Man who insists so much on Clearness of Meaning in others, and is so much in blaming their Confusion and Inconsistence, ought, if he was able, to have explained his Meaning in this Phrase of passive Ground of Action, so as to shew it not to be consused and inconsistent.

If any should suppose, that Mr. Chubb, when he speaks of Motive as a passive Ground of Astion, don't mean passive with Regard to that Volition which it is the Ground of, but some other antecedent Volition (tho' his Purpose and Argument, and whole Discourse, will by no Means allow of fuch a Supposition) yet it would not help the Matter in the leaft. For, (1.) If we suppose there to be an Act of Volition or Choice, by which the Soul chuses to yield to the Invitation of a Motive to another Volition, by which the Soul chuses fomething elfe; both these supposed Volitions are in Effect the very fame. A Volition, or chufing to yield to the Force of a Motive inviting to chuse fomething, comes to just the fame Thing as chufing the Thing which the Motive invites to, as I observed before. So that here can be no Room to help the Matter, by a Distinction of two Volitions. (2.) If the Motive be passive with Respect, not to the fame Volition that the Motive excites to, but one truly diffinct and prior; yet, by Mr. Chubb, that prior Volition can't take Place, without a Motive or Excitement, as a previous Ground Inconsistence of Mr. Chubb's Part II.

of it's Existence. For he insists, that it is absurd to suppose any Volition should take Place without some previous Motive to induce it. So that at last it comes to just the same Absurdity: for if every Volition must have a previous Motive, then the very first in the whole Series must be excited by a previous Motive; and yet the Motive to that first Volition is passive; but can't be passive with Regard to another antecedent Volition, because, by the Supposition, it is the very first: Therefore if it be passive with Respect to any Volition, it must be so with Regard to that very Volition that it is the Ground of, and that is excited by it.

III. Tho' Mr. Chubb afferts, as above, that every Volition has some Motive, and that, in the Nature of the Thing, no Volition can take Place without some Motive to induce it; yet he afferts, that Volition does not always follow the strongest Motive; or in other Words, is not governed by any superiour Strength of the Motive that is followed. beyond Motives to the contrary, previous to the Volition it self. His own Words, P. 258, are as follows: "Tho' with regard to physical Causes, " that which is strongest always prevails, yet it is " otherwise with regard to moral Causes. Of " thefe, fometimes the stronger, fometimes the " weaker, prevails. And the Ground of this " Difference is evident, namely, that what we " call moral Causes, strictly speaking, are no "Cautes at all, but barely paffive Reasons of, or Excitements to the Action, or to the refrain-". ing from acting. which Excitements we have " Power, or are at Liberty to comply with or re-" ject, as I have shewed above." And so throughout the Paragraph, he, in a variety of Phrases, infifts, that the Will is not always determined by the strongest Motive, unless by strongest we preposteposterously mean actually prevailing in the Event; which is not in the Motive, but in the Will; but that the Will is not always determined by the Motive which is strongest, by any Strength previous to the Volition it self. And he elsewhere does abundantly affert, that the Will is determined by no superiour Strength or Advantage that Motives have, from any Constitution or State of Things, or any Circumstances whatsoever, previous to the actual Determination of the Will. And indeed his whole Discourse on human Liberty implies it, his whole Scheme is founded upon it.

But these Things cannot stand together. There is fuch a Thing as a Diversity of Strength in Motives to Choice, previous to the Choice it felf. Mr. Chubb himfelf supposes, that they do previously invite, induce, excite and dispose the Mind to Action. This implies, that they have femething in themselves that is inviting, some Tendency to induce and dispose to Volition, previous to Volition it felf. And if they have in themselves this Nature and Tendency, doubtless they have it in certain limited Degrees, which are capable of Diverfity; and forme have it in greater Dagrees, others in lefs; and they that have most of this Tendency, confidered with all their Nature and Circumftances, previous to Volition, they are the ftrongest Motives; and those that have least, are the weakest Morives.

Now if Volition sometimes don't follow the Motive which is strongest, or has most pravious Tend neg or Advantage, all Things considered, to include or excite it, but follows the weal-oft, or that which as it stands previously in the Mind's View, has least Tendency to induce it; herein the Will exparently acts wholly without stands previous Reason to dispose the Mind to it, contrary to what the fame Author supposes. The Act wherein the Will must proceed without a previous Motive to induce it, is the Act of preferring the weakest Motive. For how absurd is it to fay, The Mind fees previous Reafon in the Motive, to prefer that Motive before the other; and at the same Time to suppose, that there is Nothing in the Motive, in it's Nature, State, or any Circumftance of it whatfoever, as it ftands in the previous View of the Mind, that gives it any Preference; but on the contrary, the other Motive that flands in Competition with it, in all these Respects, has most belonging to it, that is inviting and moving, and has most of a Tendency to Choice and Preference? This is certainly as much as to fay, there is previous Ground and Reason in the Motive for the Act of Preference, and yet no previous Reason for it. By the Supposition, as to all that is in the two rival Motives which tends to Preference, previous to the Act of Preference, it is not in that which is prefer'd, but wholly in the other: Because appearing superiour Strength, and all appearing Preferableness is in that; and yet Mr. Chubb supposes, that the Act of Preserence is from previous Ground and Reason in the Motive which is preferred. But are thefe Things confistent? Can there be previous Ground in a Thing for an Event that takes Place, and vet no previous Tendency in it to that Event? If one Thing follows another, without any previous Tendency to its following, then I should think it very plain, that it follows it without any Manner of previous Reason why it should follow.

Yea, in this Case, Mr. Chubb supposes, that the Event follows an Antecedent or a previous Thing, as the Ground of it's Existence, not only that has no Tendency to it, but a contrary Tendency. The Event is the Preference which the Mind gives to that Motive which is weaker, as it stands in the previous View of the Mind; the immediate Antecedent is the View the Mind has of the two rival Motives conjunctly; in which previous View of the Mind, all the Preferableness, or previous Tendency to Preference, is supposed to be on the other Side, or in the contrary Motive; and all the Unworthiness of Preference, and so previous Tendency to Comparative Neglect, Rejection or Undervaluing, is on that Side which is prefer'd: And yet in this View of the Mind is supposed to be the previous Ground or Reason of this Act of Preference, exciting it, and disposing the Mind to it. Which, I leave the Reader to judge, whether it be absurd or not. If it be not, then it is not absurd to say, that the previous Tendency of an Antecedent to a Consequent, is the Ground and Reason why that Consequent does not follow; and the Want of a previous Tendency to an Event, yea, a Tendency to the Contrary, is the true Ground and Reason why that Event does follow.

An Act of Choice or Preference is a comparative Act, wherein the Mind acts with Reference to two or more Things that are compared, and fland in Competition in the Mind's View. If the Mind, in this comparative Act, prefers that which appears inferiour in the Comparison, then the Mind herein acts absolutely without Motive, or Inducement, or any Temptation whatsoever. Then, if a hungry Man has the Offer of two Sorts of Food, both which he finds an Appetite to, but has a stronger Apperite to one than the other; and there be no Circumstances or Excitements whatsoever in the Case to induce him to take take either the one or the other, but meerly his Appetite: If in the Choice he makes between them, he chuses that which he has least Appetite to, and refuses that to which he has the strongest Appetite, this is a Choice made absolutely without previous Motive, Excitement, Reason or Temptation, as much as if he were perfectly without all Appetite to either: Because his Volition in this Cafe is a comparative Act, attending and following a comparative View of the Food which he chuses, viewing it as related to, and compared with the other Sort of Food, in which View his Preference has absolutely no previous Ground, yea, is against all previous Ground and Motive. And if there be any Principle in Man from whence an Act of Choice may arise after this Manner, from the same Principle Volition may arife wholly without Motive on either Side. the Mind in it's Volition can go beyond Motive, then it can go without Motive: for when it is beyond the Morive, it is out of the Reach of the Motive, out of the Limits of it's Influence, and fo without Morive. If Volition goes beyond the Strength and Tendency of Motive, and especially if it goes against it's Tendency, this demonstrates the Independence of Volition or Motive. And if fo, no Reason can be given for what Mr. Chubb fo often afferts, even that in the Nature of Things Volition cannot take Place without a Motive to induce it.

If the most High should endow a Balance with Agency or Activity of Nature, in fuch a Manner that when unequal Weights are put into the Scales, it's Agency could enable it to cause that Scale to descend which has the least Weight, and so to raise the greater Weight; this would clearly demonstrate, that the Motion of the Balance do's not depend on Weights in the Scales, at least as much as if the Balance should move it self, when there is no Weight in either Scale. And the Activity of the Balance which is sufficient to move it self against the greater Weight, must certainly be more than sufficient to move it when there is no Weight at all.

Mr. Chubb supposes, that the Will can't stir at all without some Motive; and also supposes, that if there be a Motive to one Thing, and none to the Contrary, Volition will infallibly follow that Motive. This is vertually to suppose an entire Dependence of the Will on Motives: If it were not wholly dependent on them, it could surely help it felf a little without them, or help it felf a little against a Motive, without help from the Strength and Weight of a contrary Motive. And yet his supposing that the Will, when it has before it various opposite Motives, can use them as it pleases, and chuse it's own Instuence from them, and neglect the strongest, and follow the weakest, supposes it to be wholly independent on Motives.

It further appears, on Mr. Chubb's Supposition, that Volition must be without any previous Ground in any Motive, thus: If it be as he supposes, that the Will is not determined by any previous superiour Strength of the Motive, but determines and chuses it's own Motive, then, when the rival Motives are exactly equal in Strength and Tendency to induce, in all Respects, it may follow either; and may in such a Case, sometimes follow one, sometimes the other. And if so, this Diversity which appears between the Acts of the Will, is plainly without previous Ground in either of the Motives; for all that is previously in the Motives, is supposed precisely and perfectly the same, without any Diverfity whatfoever. Now perfect Identity, as to all that is previous in the Antecedent, can't be the Ground and Reason of Diversity in the Consequent. Perfect Identity in the Ground can't be a Reason why it is not followed with the fame Consequence. And therefore the Source of this Diverfity of Confequence must be fought for elfewhere.

And lastly, it may be observed, that however Mr. Chubb does much infift that no Volition can take Place without fome Motive to induce it, which previously disposes the Mind to it; yet, as he also insists that the Mind without Reference to any fuperiour Strength of Motives, picks and chuses for it's Motive to follow; He himself herein plainly supposes, that with Regard to the Mind's Preference of one Motive before another, it is not the Motive that disposes the Will, but the Will disposes itself to follow the Motive.

IV. Mr. Chubb supposes Necessity to be utterly inconsistent with Agency; and that to suppose a Being to be an Agent in that which is necessary, is a plain Contradiction. P. 311, and throughout his Discourses on the Subject of Liberty, he supposes, that Necessity cannot consist with Agency or Freedom; and that to suppose otherwise, is to make Liberty and Necessity, Action and Passion, the tame Thing. And fo he feems to suppose, that there is no Action strictly speaking, but Volition; and that as to the Effects of Volition in Body or Mind, in themselves considered, being necessary, they are faid to be free, only as they are the Effects of an Act that is not necessary.

And yet, according to him, Volition itself is the Effect of Volition; yea, every Act of free Volition:

lition: and therefore every Act of free Volition must, by what has now been observed from Him, be necessary. That every Act of free Volition is it felf the Effect of Volition, is abundantly supposed by Him. In P. 341, he says, " If a Man is fuch a Creature as I have proved him to be, "that is, if he has in him a Power or Liberty " of doing either Good or Evil, and either of " these is the Subject of his own free Choice, so " that he might, IF HE HAD PLEASED, " have CHOSEN and done the contrary." Here he supposes, all that is Good or Evil in Man is the Effect of his Choice; and so that his good or evil Choice it felf is the Effect of his Pleasure or Choice, in these Words, He might if he had PLEASED, bave CHOSEN the contrary. So in P. 356. "Though it be highly reasonable, that a "Man should always chuse the greater Good, -- yet he may, if he PLEASE, CHUSE other-" wife." Which is the fame Thing as if he had said, He may, if he chuses, chuse otherwise. And then he goes on, "---that is, he may, if he pleafes, " chuse what is good for himself, &c." And again in the fame Page, "The Will is not con-" fined by the Understanding, to any particular " Sort of Good, whether greater or less; but is " at Liberty to chuse what Kind of Good it pleases." --- If there be any Meaning in the last Words, the Meaning must be this, that the Will is at Liberty to chuse what Kind of Good it chuses to chuse; supposing the Act of Choice it felf determined by an antecedent Choice. The Liberty Mr. Chubb fpeaks of, is not only a Man's having Power to move his Body agreably to an antecedent Act of Choice, but to use or exert the Faculties of his Soul. Thus, in P. 379. fpeaking of the Faculties of his Mind, he fays, "Man has Power, and " is at Liberty to neglect these Faculties, to use K 2

"them aright, or to abuse them, as he pleases." And that he supposes an Act of Choice, or Exercife of Pleasure, properly distinct from, and antecedent to those Acts thus chosen, directing, commanding and producing the chosen Acts, and even the Acts of Choice themselves, is very plain in P. 283. "He can command his Actions; and herein confifts his Liberty; He can give or deny " himself that Pleasure as he pleases." And P. 377. "If the Actions of Men-are not the Produce of a " free Choice, or Election, but spring from a Necessity of Nature,—he cannot in Reason be " the Object of Reward or Punishment on their "Account. Whereas, if Action in Man, whether "Good or Evil, is the Produce of Will or free " Choice; fo that a Man in either Case, had it in " his Power, and was at Liberty to have CHO-" SEN the contrary, he is the proper Object of "Reward or Punishment, according as he CHU-" SES to behave Himself." Here in these last Words, he speaks of Liberty of CHUSING, according as he CHUSES. So that the Behaviour which he speaks of as subject to his Choice, is his chusing it self, as well as his external Conduct consequent upon it. And therefore 'tis evident, he means not only external Actions, but the Acts of Choice themselves, when he speaks of all free Actions, as the PRODUCE of free Choice. And this is abundantly evident in what he tays in P. 372, & 272.

Now these Things imply a twofold great Abfurdity and Inconsistence.

1. To suppose, as Mr. Chubb plainly does, that every free Act of Choice is commanded by, and is the Produce of free Choice, is to suppose the first free Act of Choice belonging to the Case, yea, the first free Act of Choice that ever Man exerted, to be the Produce of an antecedent Act of Choice.

But I hope I need not labour at all to convince my Readers, that 'tis an Abfurdity to fay, the very first Act is the Produce of another Act that went before it.

- 2. If it were both possible and real, as Mr. Chubb infifts, that every free Act of Choice were the Produce or the Effect of a free Act of Choice: yet even then, according to his Principles, no one Act of Choice would be free, but every one neceffary; because, every Act of Choice being the Effect of a foregoing Act, every Act would be necessarily connected with that foregoing Cause. For Mr. Chubb himfelf fays, P. 389. "When the "Self moving Power is exerted, it becomes the " necessary Cause of it's Effects." So that his Notion of a free Act, that is rewardable or punishable, is a Heap of Contradictions. It is a free Act, and yet, by his own Notion of Freedom, is necessary; and therefore by him it is a Contradiction, to suppose it to be free. According to him, every free Act is the Produce of a free Act: fo that there must be an infinite Number of free Acts in Succession, without any Beginning, in an Agent that has a Beginning. And therefore here is an infinite Number of free Acts, every one of them free; and yet not any one of them free, but every Act in the whole infinite Chain a neceffary Effect. All the Acts are rewardable or punishable, and yet the Agent cannot, in Reason, be the Object of Reward or Punishment, on Account of any one of these Actions. He is active in them all, and passive in none; yet active in none, but passive in all, &c.
- V. Mr. Chubb does most strenuously deny, that Motives are Causes of the Acts of the Will; or that the moving Principle in Man is moved, or caused to be exerted by Motives. His Words P. 388

Inconsistence of Mr. Chubb's Part II. and 389. are, "If the moving Principle in Man "is MOVED, or CAUSED TO BE EXERT" ED, by something external to Man, which all "Motives are, then it would not be a Self-moving "Principle, seeing it would be moved by a Principle external to it self. And to say, that a "Self-moving Principle is MOVED, or CAU" SED TO BE EXERTED, by a Cause external to it self, is absurd and a Contradiction &c."—And in the next Page, 'tis particularly and largely insisted, that Motives are Causes in no Case, that they are meerly passive in the Production of Action, and have no Causality in the Production of it,—no Causality, to be the Cause of the Exertion of the Will.

Now I defire it may be confidered, how this can possibly confist with what he says in other Places. Let it be noted here,

1. Mr. Chubb abundantly speaks of Motives as Excitements of the Acts of the Will; and fays, that Motives do excite Volition, and induce it, and that they are necessary to this End; that in the Reason and Nature of Things, Volition cannot take Place without Motives to excite it. But now if Motives excite the Will, they move it; and yet he fays, 'tis abfurd to fay, the Will is moved by Motives. And again (if Language is of any Significancy at all) If Motives excite Volition, then they are the Cause of it's being excited; and to cause Volition to be excited, is to cause it to be put forth or exerted. Yea, Mr. Chubb fays himfelf, P. 317. Motive is necessary to the Exertion of the active Faculty. To excite, is positively to do something; and certainly that which does fomething, is the Cause of the Thing done by it. To create, is to cause to be created; to make, is to cause to be made;

made; to kill, is to cause to be killed; to quicken, is to cause to be quickened; and to excite, is to cause to be excited. To excite, is to be a Cause, in the most proper Sense, not meerly a negative Occafion, but a Ground of Existence by positive Influence. The Notion of exciting, is exerting Influence to cause the Effect to arise or come forth into Existence.

- 2. Mr. Chubb himself, P. 317, speaks of Motives as the Ground and Reason of Action BY INFLUENCE, and BY PREVAILING IN-FLUENCE. Now, what can be meant by a Cause, but something that is the Ground and Reason of a Thing by it's Influence, an Influence that is prevalent and fo effectual?
- 3. This Author not only speaks of Motives as the Ground and Reason of Action, by prevailing Influence; but expresly of their Influence as prevailing FOR THE PRODUCTION of an Action, in the same P. 317: which makes the Inconfistency still more palpable and notorious. The Production of an Effect is certainly the Causing of an Effect; and productive Influence is causal Influence, if any Thing is; and that which has this Influence prevalently, fo as thereby to become the Ground of another Thing, is a Cause of that Thing, if there be any fuch Thing as a Caufe. This Influence, Mr. Chubb fays, Motives have to produce an Action; and yet he fays, 'tis abfurd and a Contradiction, to fay they are Causes.
- 4. In the fame Page, He once and again speaks of Motives as disposing the Agent to Action, by their Influence. His Words are these: " As Mo-"tive, which takes Place in the Understanding, " and is the Product of Intelligence, is NECES-136 Inconsistence of Mr. Chubb's &c. Part II. " SARY to Action, that is, to the EXERTION of the active Faculty, because that Faculty "would not be exerted without some PRE-" VIOUS REASON to DISPOSE the Mind to " Action; fo from hence it plainly appears, that "when a Man is faid to be disposed to one Action " rather than another, this properly fignifies the " PREVAILING INFLUENCE that one Mo-" tive has upon a Man FOR THE PRODUC-"TION of an Action, or for the being at Rest, 66 before all other Motives, for the Production of "the contrary. For as Motive is the Ground " and Reason of any Action, so the Motive that orevails, DISPOSES the Agent to the Perform-" ance of that Action."

"SARY K 4

Now, if Motives dispose the Mind to Action, then they cause the Mind to be disposed; and to cause the Mind to be disposed; and to cause it to be willing; and to cause it to be willing, is to cause it to will; and that is the same Thing as to be the Cause of an Act of the Will. And yet this same Mr. Chubb holds it to be absurd, to suppose Motive to be a Cause of the Act of the Will.

And if we compare these Things together, we have here again a whole Heap of Inconsistences. Motives are the previous Ground and Reason of the Acts of the Will; yea, the necessary Ground and Reason of their Exertion, without which they will not be exerted, and cannot in the Nature of Things take Place; and they do excite these Acts of the Will, and do this by a prevailing Influence; yea, an Influence which prevails for the Production of the Act of the Will, and for the disposing of the Mind to it; And yet 'tis absurd, to suppose Motive to be a Cause of an Act of the Will, or that a Principle of Will is moved or caused to be exerted by it, or that it has

Sect. XI. GOD certainly foreknows &c. 137 any Causality in the Production of it, or any Causality to be the Cause of the Exertion of the Will.

A due Consideration of these Things which Mr. Chubb has advanced, the strange Inconsistences which the Notion of Liberty confifting in the Will's Power of Self-determination void of all Necessity, united with that Dictate of common Sense, that there can be no Volition without a Motive, drove him into, may be fufficient to convince us, that it is utterly impossible ever to make that Notion of Liberty confistent with the Influence of Motives in Volition. And as it is in a manner felf-evident, that there can be no Act of Will, Choice or Preference of the Mind, without fome Motive or Inducement, fomething in the Mind's View, which it aims at, feeks, inclines to. and goes after; fo 'tis most manifest, there is no fuch Liberty in the Universe as Arminians insist on; nor any fuch Thing possible, or conceivable.

SECTION XI.

The Evidence of GOD's certain Foreknowledge of the Volitions of moral Agents.

THAT the Acts of the Wills of moral Agents are not contingent Events, in that Sense, as to be without all Necessity, appears by God's certain Foreknowledge of such Events.

In handling this Argument, I would in the first Place prove, that God has a certain Foreknow-ledge of the voluntary Acts of moral Agents; and fecondly, show the Consequence, or how it follows from hence, that the Volitions of moral Agents 138 GOD certainly foreknows Part II. are not contingent, so as to be without Necessity of Connection and Consequence.

FIRST, I am to prove, that God has an absolute and certain Foreknowledge of the free Actions of moral Agents.

One would think, it should be wholly needless to enter on such an Argument with any that profess themselves Christians: But so it is; God's certain Foreknowledge of the free Acts of moral Agents, is denied by some that pretend to believe the Scriptures to be the Word of God; and especially of late. I therefore shall consider the Evidence of such a Prescience in the most High, as fully as the designed Limits of this Essay will admit of; supposing my self herein to have to do with such as own the Truth of the Bible.

- -Arg. I. My first Argument shall be taken from God's Prediction of such Events. Here I would in the first Place lay down these two Things as Axioms.
- (1.) If God don't foreknow, He can't foretell fuch Events; that is, He can't peremptorily and certainly foretell them. If God has no more than an uncertain Guess concerning Events of this Kind, then He can declare no more than an uncertain Guess. Positively to foretell, is to profess to foreknow, or to declare positive Foreknowlege.
- (2.) If God don't certainly foreknow the future Volitions of moral Agents, then neither can He certainly foreknow those Events which are consequent and dependent on these Volitions. The Existence of the one depending on the Existence of the other, the Knowledge of the Existence of the one depends on the Knowledge of the Existence of the other; and the one can't be more certain than the other.

Therefore, how many, how great, and how extensive soever the Consequences of the Volitions of moral Agents may be; tho' they should extend to an Alteration of the State of Things thro' the Universe, and should be continued in a Series of successive Events to all Eternity, and should in the Progress of Things branch forth into an infinite Number of Series, each of them going on in an endless Line or Chain of Events; God must be as ignorant of all these Consequences, as He is of the Volition whence they first take their Rise: All these Events, and the whole State of Things depending on them, how important, extensive and vast soever, must be hid from him.

These Positions being such as I suppose none will deny, I now proceed to observe the following Things.

1. Men's moral Conduct and Qualities, their Vertues and Vices, their Wickedness and good Practice, Things rewardable and punishable, have often been foretold by God. — Pharaoh's moral Conduct, in refusing to obey God's Command, in letting his People go, was foretold. God says to Moses, Exod. iii. 19. I am sure, that the King of Egypt will not let you go. Here God professes not only to guess at, but to know Pharaoh's future Disobedience. In Chap. vii. 4. God says, But Pharaoh shall not bearken unto you; that I may lay mine Hand upon Egypt, &c. And Chap. ix. 30. Moses says to Pharaoh, As for thee, and thy Servants, I KNOW that ye will not fear the Lord. See also Chap. xi. 9. — The moral Conduct of Joseph, by Name,

Name, in his zealously exerting himself in Oppofition to Idolatry, in particular Acts of his, was foretold above three Hundred Years before he was born, and the Prophecy feal'd by a Miracle, and renewed and confirmed by the Words of a fecond Prophet, as what furely would not fail, I Kings xiii. 1-6, 32. This Prophecy was also in Effect a Prediction of the moral Conduct of the People, in upholding their Schismatical and Idolatrous Worship 'till that Time, and the Idolatry of those Priests of the high Places, which it is foretold Fosiab should offer upon that Altar of Betbel. Micaiab foretold the foolish and sinful Conduct of Abab, in refusing to hearken to the Word of the Lord by him, and chusing rather to hearken to the false Prophets, in going to Ramoth-Gilead to his Ruin, 1 Kings xxi. 20,---22.-- The moral Conduct of Hazael was foretold, in that Cruelty he fhould be guilty of; on which Hazael fays, What, is thy Servant a Dog, that he should do this Thing! The Prophet speaks of the Event as what he knew, and not what he conjectured. 2 Kings viii. 12. I know the Evil that they wilt do unto the Children of Ifrael: Thou wilt dash their Children, and rip up their Women with Child .-- The moral Conduct of Cyrus is foretold, long before he had a Being, in his Mercy to God's People, and Regard to the true God, in turning the Captivity of the Jews, and promoting the building of the Temple. Isai. xliv. 28. & lxv. 13. Compare 2 Chron. xxxvi. 22, 23. and Ezra i. 1,--4.--How many Inflances of the moral Conduct of the Kings of the North and South, particular Inftances of the wicked Behaviour of the Kings of Syria and Egypt, are foretold in the xith Chapter of Daniel? Their Corruption, Violence, Robbery, Treachery, and Lies. And particularly, how much is foretold of the horrid Wickedness of Antiochus Epiphanes, called there a vile a vile Person, instead of Epiphanes, or Illustrious. In that Chapter, and also in Chap. viii. ver. 9,---14, 23, to the End, are foretold his Flattery, Deceit and Lies, his having his Heart fet to do Mischief, and set against the holy Covenant, his destroying and treading under Foot the holy People, in a marvellous Manner, his baving Indignation against the holy Covenant, setting his Heart against it, and conspiring against it, his polluting the Sanctuary of Strength, treading it under Foot, taking away the daily Sacrifice, and placing the Abomination that maketh desolate; his great Pride, magnifying himself against God, and uttering marvellous Blasphemies against Him, 'till God in Indignation should destroy him. Withal, the moral Conduct of the Jews, on Occasion of his Persecution, is predicted. 'Tis foretold, that he should corrupt many by Flatteries, Chap. xi. 32,---34. But that others should behave with a glorious Constancy and Fortitude, in Opposition to him, ver. 32. And that some good Men should fall and repent, ver. 35. Christ foretold Peter's Sin, in denying his Lord, with it's Circumstances, in a peremptory Manner. And fo, that great Sin of Judas, in betraying his Mafter, and it's dreadful and eternal Punishment in Hell, was foretold in the like positive Manner. Matt. xxvi. 21,---25. and parallel Places in the other Evangelists.

2. Many Events have been foretold by God, which were consequent and dependent on the moral Conquest of particular Persons, and were accomplished, either by their vertuous or vicious Actions.---Thus, the Children of Israel's going down anto Egypt to dwell there, was foretold to Abn ham, Gen xv. which was brought about by the ackedness of Joseph's Brethren in selling him, and the Wickedness of Joseph's Mistress, and his own fignal Vertue in refisting her Temptation. The Accomplishment of the Thing prefigur'd in Joseph's Dream, depended on the same moral Conduct. Jotham's Parable and Prophecy, Judges ix. 15,---20. was accomplished by the wicked Conduct of Abimelech, and the Men of Shechem. The Prophecies against the House of Eli, 1 Sam. Chap. ii. & iii. were accomplished by the Wickedness of Doeg the Edomite, in accusing the Priests; and the great Impiety, and extreme Cruelty of Saul in destroying the Priests at Nob. I Sam. xxii. --- Nathan's Prophecy against David, 2 Sam. xii. 11, 12. was fulfill'd by the horrible Wickedness of Abselom, in rebelling against his Father, seeking his Life, and lying with his Concubines in the Sight of the Sun. The Prophecy against So-lomon, 1 Kings xi. 11,---13. was fulfilled by Feroboam's Rebellion and Usurpation, which are spoken of as his Wickedness, 2 Chron. xiii. 5, 6. compare ver. 18. The Prophecy against Jeroboam's Family, 1 Kings xiv. was fulfilled by the Conspiracy, Treason, and cruel Murders of Baasha, 2 Kings xv. 27, &c. The Predictions of the Prophet Febu against the House of Baasha, 1 Kings xvi. at the Beginning, were fulfilled by the Treafon and Parricide of Zimri, 1 Kings xvi. 9,---13, 20.

3. How often has God foretold the future moral Conduct of Nations and Peoples, of Numbers, Bodies, and Successions of Men; with God's judicial Proceedings, and many other Events confequent and dependent on their Vertues and Vices; which could not be foreknown, if the Volitions of Men, wherein they acted as moral Agents, had not been foreseen? The future Cruelty of the Egyptians in oppressing Israel, and God's judging and punishing them for it, was foretold long before fore it came to pass. Gen. xv. 13, 14. The Continuance of the Iniquity of the Amorites, and the Increase of it until it should be full, and they ripe for Destruction, was foretold above four Hundred Years before-hand, Gen. xv. 16. Att. vii. 6, 7. The Prophecies of the Destruction of Jerusalem, and the Land of Judah, were absolute; 2 Kings xx. 17,---19. Chap. xxii. 15, to the End. was foretold in Hezekiah's Time, and was abundantly infifted on in the Book of the Prophet Isaiah, who wrote nothing after Hezekiab's Days. It was foretold in Josiah's Time, in the Beginning of a great Reformation, 2 Kings xxii. And it is manifest by innumerable Things in the Prediction of the Prophets, relating to this Event, it's Time, it's Circumstances, it's Continuance and End; the Return from the Captivity, the Restoration of the Temple, City and Land, and many Circumstances, and Consequences of That; I say, these shew plainly, that the Prophecies of this great Event were absolute. And yet this Event was connected with, and dependent on two Things in Men's moral Conduct: first, the injurious Rapine and Violence of the King of Babylon and his People, as the efficient Cause; which God often speaks of as what he highly refented, and would feverely punish; and 2dly, The final Obstinacy of the Jews. That great Event is often spoken of as fuspended on this. Jer. iv. 1. & v. 1. vii. 1,---7. xi. 1,---6. xvii. 24, to the End. xxv. 1,---7. xxvi. 1,---8, 13. & xxxviii. 17, 18. Therefore this Destruction and Captivity could not be foreknown, unless such a moral Conduct of the Chaldeans and Jews had been foreknown. And then it was foretold, that the People should be finally obstinate, to the Destruction and utter Desolution of the City and Land. Isi. vi. 9,--- 11. Fer. i. 18, 19. vii. 27, --- 29. Ezek. iii. 7. & xxiv. 13, 14.

144 GOD certainly foreknows Part II.

The final Obstinacy of those Jews who were left in the Land of Israel, and who afterwards went down into Egypt, in their Idolatry and Rejection of the true God, was foretold by God, and the Prediction confirmed with an Oath, Jer. xliv. 26, 27. And God tells the People, Isai. xlviii. 3, 4,--8. that he had predicted those Things which should be consequent on their Treachery and Obstinacy, because he knew they would be obstinate; and that he had declared these Things before-hand, for their Conviction of his being the only true God, &c.

The Destruction of Babylon, with many of the Circumstances of it, was fore-told, as the Judgment of God for the exceeding Pride and Haughtiness of the Heads of that Monarchy, Nebuchadnezzar, and his Successors, and their wickedly destroying other Nations, and particularly for their exalting themselves against the true God and his People, before any of these Monarche had a Being; Isai. Chap. xiii, xiv, xlvii: Compare Habbak. ii. 5, to the End, and Jer. Chap. I. and li. That Babylon's Destruction was to be a Recompence, according to the Works of their own Hands, appears by Jer. xxv. 14. ---- The Immorality which the People of Babylon, and particularly her Princes and great Men, were guilty of, that very Night that the City was destroyed, their Revelling and Drunkenness at Belshazzar's Idolatrous Feast, was foretold, Fer. li. 39, 57.

The Return of the Jews from the Babylonish Captivity is often very particularly foretold, with many Circumstances, and the Promises of it are very peremptory; Jer. xxxi. 35,---40. and xxxii, 6,---15, 41,---44. and xxxiii. 24,---26. And the very Time of their Return was prefix'd; Jer.

xxv. 11, 12. and xxix. 10, 11. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21. Ezek. iv. 6. and Dan. ix. 2. And yet the Prophecies reprefent their Return as confequent on their Repentance. And their Repentance it felf is very expresly and particularly foretold, Fer. xxix. 12, 13, 14. xxxi. 8, 9, 18,---31. xxxiii. 8. 1. 4, 5. Ezek. vi. 8, 9, 10. vii. 16. xiv. 22, 23. and xx. 43, 44.

It was foretold under the old Testament, that the Meffiah should suffer greatly through the Malice and Cruelty of Men; as is largely and fully fet forth, Psal. xxii. applied to Christ in the new Testament, Matt. xxvii. 35, 43. Luke xxiii. 34. John xix. 24. Heb. ii. 12. And likewise in Pfal. Ixix. which, it is also evident by the New Testament, is spoken of Christ; John xv. 25. vii. 5, Ge. and ii. 17. Rom. xv. 3. Matt. xxvii. 34, 48. Mark xv. 23. John xix. 29. The fame Thing is also foretold, Isai. liii. and 1. 6. and Mic. v. 1. This Cruelty of Men was their Sin, and what they acted as moral Agents. It was foretold, that there should be an Union of Heathen and Jewish Rulers against Christ, Pjal. ii. 1, 2. com par'd with Atts iv. 25, --- 28. It was foretold, that the Jews should generally reject and despise the Messiah, Isai. xlix. 5, 6, 7. and liii. 1,---3. Pfalm xxii. 6, 7. and lxix. 4, 8, 19, 20. And it was foretold, that the Body of that Nation should be rejected in the Messiah's Days, from being God's People, for their Obstinacy in Sin; Isai. xlix. 4, ---7. and viii. 14, 15, 16. compared with Rom. x. 19. and Ifai hav. at the beginning, compared with Rom. x. 20, 21. It was foretold, that Christ should be rejected by the chief Priests and Rulers among the Jews, Pfalm exviii. 22. compared with Matth. Exi. 42. Acts iv. 11. 1 Pet. ii. 4, 7.

146 GOD certainly foreknows Part II.

Christ himself foretold his being delivered into the Hands of the Elders, chief Priests and Scribes, and his being cruelly treated by them, and condemned to Death; and that he by them should be delivered to the Gentiles: and that He should be mocked, and scourged, and crucified, (Matt. xvi. 21. and xx. +7,---19. Luke ix. 22. John viii. 28.) and that the Feople should be concerned in and confenting to his Death, (Luke xx. 13,---18.) especially the Inhabitants of Jerusalem; Luke xiii. 33, ---35. He foretold, that the Disciples should all be offended because of Him that Night that he was betrayed, and should for sake him; Matt. xxvi. 31. John xvi. 32. He foretold, that He should be rejected of that Generation, even the Body of the People, and that they should continue obstinate, to their Ruin; Matt. xii. 45. xxi. 33,--42. and xxii 1, --- 7. Luke xiii. 16, 21, 24. xvii. 25. xix. 14, 27, 41, --44. xx. 13,---18. and xxiii. 34,---39.

As it was foretold in both old Testament and new, that the Jews should reject the Messiah, so it was foretold that the Gentiles should receive Him, and so be admitted to the Privileges of God's People; in Places too many to be now particularly mentioned. It was foretold in the old Testament, that the Jews should envy the Gentiles on this Account; Deut. xxxii. 21. compar'd with flow. x. 10. Christ himself often foretold, that the Gentiles would embrace the true Religion, and become his Followers and People; Matt. viii. 10, 11, 12. xxi. 41,---43. and xxii. 8,---10. Luke xiii. 28. xiv. 16,---24. and xx. 16. John x. 16. He also foretold the Jews Envy of the Gentiles on this Occasion; Matt. xx. 12,---16. Lake xv. 26, to the End. He foretold, that they should continue in this Opposition and Envy, and should mani-

Sect. XI. the Volitions of moral Agents. 147 fest it in the cruel Persecutions of his Followers, to their utter Destruction; Matt. xxi. 33,---42. xxii. 6. and xxiii. 34,---39. Luke xi. 49,---51. The Jews Obstinacy is also foretold, Alls xxii. 18. Christ often foretold the great Persecutions his Followers should meet with, both from Jews and Gentiles; Matt. x. 16,---18, 21, 22, 34,--36. and xxiv. 9. Mark xiii. 9. Luke x. 3. xii. 11, 49,--53. and xxi. 12, 16, 17. John xv. 18,---21. and xvi. 1,---4. 20,---22, 23. He foretold the Martyrdom of particular Persons; Matt. xx. 23. John xiii. 36. and xxi. 18, 19, 22. He foretold the great Success of the Gospel in the City of Samaria, as near approaching; which afterwards was fulfilled by the Preaching of Philip, John iv. 35,---38. He foretold the Riling of many Deceivers after his Departure, Matt. xxiv. 4, 5, 11. and the Apostacy of many of his profess'd Followers; Matt. xxiv. 10,---12.

The Perfecutions, which the Apostle Paul was to meet with in the World, were foretold; Asis ix. 16.--xx. 23, and xxi. 11. The Apostle says to the Christian Ephesians, Acts xx. 29, 30. I know. that after my Departure shall grievous Wolves enter an among you, not sparing the Plock: Also of your expectives shall Men arise, speaking perverse Things, to draw away Disciples after them. The Apostle says, He know this; but he did not know it, if God did not know the future Actions of moral Agents.

4. Unless God foreknows the future Asts of moral Agents, all the Prophecies we have in Scripture concerning the great Antichiplian Agestacy; the Rife, Reign, wicked Qualities, and Deeds of the Mon of Sin, and his Instruments and Adherents; the Extent and long Continuance of his Dominion, his Influence on the Minds of Princes and others, to corrupt them, and draw them away to Idolatry, and other foul Vices; his great and cruel Perfecutions; the Behaviour of the Saints under these great Temptations, &c. &c. I fay, unless the Volitions of moral Agents are foreseen, all these Prophecies are uttered without knowing the Things foretold.

The Fredictions relating to this great Apostacy are all of a moral Nature, relating to Men's Vertues and Vices, and their Exercises, Fruits and Consequences, and Events depending on them; and are very particular; and most of them often repeated, with many precise Characteristicks, Descriptions, and Limitations of Qualities, Conduct, Influence, Effects, Extent, Duration, Periods, Circumstances, sinal Issue, &c. which it would be very long to mention particularly. And to suppose, all these are predicted by God without any certain Knowledge of the suture moral Behaviour of free Agents, would be to the utmost Degree absurd.

5. Unless God foreknows the future Acts of Men's Wills, and their Behaviour as moral Agents, all those great Things which are foretold in both Old Testament and New concerning the Erection, Establishment, and universal Extent of the Kingdom of the Messiah, were predicted and promised while God was in Ignorance whether any of these Things would come to pass or no, and did but guess at them. For that Kingdom is not of this World, it don't consist in Things external, but is within Men, and consists in the Dominion of Vertue in their Hearts, in Righteousness, and Peace, and Joy in the Holy Ghost; and in these Things made manifest in Practice, to the Praise and Glory of God. The Messiah came to fave Men from their Sins, and deliver them from their spiritual Enemies; that they might serve Him in Righteousness and Holiness before Him: He gave Himfelf for us, that he might redeem us from all Iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar People, zealous of good Works. And therefore his Success consists in gaining Men's Hearts to Vertue, in their being made God's willing People in the Day of his Power. His Conquest of his Enemies confists in his Victory over Men's Corruptions and Vices. And fuch Success, such Victory, and such a Reign and Dominion is often expresly foretold: That his Kingdom shall fill the Earth; that all People, Nations and Languages should serve and obey Him: and so, that all Nations should go up to the Mountain of the House of the Lord, that He might teach them his Ways, and that they might walk in his Paths: And that all Men should be drawn to Christ, and the Earth be full of the Knowledge of the Lord (by which, in the Style of Scripture, is meant true Vertue and Religion) as the Waters cover the Seas; that God's Law should be put into Men's inward Parts, and written in their Hearts; and that God's People should be all Rightcous, &c. &c.

A very great Part of the Prophecies of the Old Testament is taken up in such Predictions as thefe .--- And here I would observe, that the Prophecies of the universal Prevalence of the Kingdom of the Messiah, and true Religion of Jesus Christ are delivered in the most peremptory Manner, and confirmed by the Oath of God, Isai. xlv. 22, to the End, Look to me, and be ye faved, all the Ends of the Earth; for I am God, and there is none else. I have SWORN by my Self, the Word is gone out of my Mouth in Righteousness, and shall not return, that unto Me every Knee shall bow; and every Tomorne GOD certainly foreknows Part II.

Tongue shall swear. SURELY, shall one say, in the Lord have I Righteousness and Strength: even to Him shall Men come, &c. But here this peremptory Declaration, and great Oath of the most High, are delivered with such mighty Solemnity, to Things which God did not know, if he did not certainly foresee the Volitions of moral Agents.

And all the Predictions of Christ and his Apostles, to the like Purpose, must be without Knowledge: As those of our Saviour comparing the Kingdom of God to a Grain of Mustard-Seed, growing exceeding great, from a fmall Beginning; and to Leaven, hid in three Measures of Ivical, 'till the whole was leaven'd, &c. - And the Prophecies in the Epifles concerning the Restoration of the Nation of the Jews to the true Church of God, and the bringing in the Fulness of the Gentiles; and the Prophecies in all the Recelation concerning the glorious Change in the meral State of the World of Mankind, attending the Destruction of Antichrist, the Kingdoms of the World becoming the Kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and it's being granted to the Church to be arrayed in that fine Linnen, white and clean, which is the Righteoufness of Saints, &c.

Corel. 1. Hence that great Promise and Oath of God to Abraham, Isaac and Jaceb, so much celebrated in Scripture, both in the Old Testament and New, namely, That in their Seed all the Nations and Families of the Earth should be blessed, must be made on Uncertainties, if God don't certainly foreknow the Volitions of moral Agents. For the Fulfilment of this Promise consists in that Success of Christ in the Work of Redemption, and that Setting up of his spiritual Kingdom over the Nations of the World, which has been spoken of.

Men are bleffed in Christ no otherwise than as they are brought to acknowledge Him, trust in Him, love and ferve Him, as is represented and predicted in Pfal. lxxii. 11. All Kings (ball fall down before Him; all Nations shall serve shim. With ver. 17. Men shall be blessed in Him; all Nations shal! call Him Bleffed. This Oath to Jacob and Abr.sbam is fulfilled in subdaing Men's Iniquities; as is implied in that of the Prophet Milab, Chaol vii. 19, 20.

- Corol. 2. Hence also it appears, That first Gospel-Promise that ever was made to Mankind, that great Prediction of the Salvation of the McMah, and his Victory over Satan, made to our first Parents, Gen. iii. 15. if there be no certain Preseience of the Volitions of moral Agents, must have no better Foundation than Conjecture. For Christ's Victory over Satan consists in Men's being faved from Sin, and in the Victory of Vertue and Holiness, over that Vice and Wickedness, which Satan by his Temptation has introduced, and wherein his Kingdom confifts.
- 6. If it be fo, that God has not a Prescience of the future Actions of moral Agents, it will fellow, that the Prophecies of Scripture in general are without Fore-knowledge. For Scripture-Prophecies, almost all of them, if not universally without any Exception, are either Predictions of the Actings and Behaviours of moral Agents, or of Events depending on them, or fome Way connected with them; judicial Dispensations, Judgments on Mon for their Wickedness, or Rewards of Vertue and Righteoufnefs, remarkable Manifestations of Favour to the kighteous, or Manifestations of sovereign Mercy to Sinners, forgiving their Iniquities, and magnifying the Riches of di-L₄ vine Grace; or Dispensations of Providence, in some Respect or other, relating to the Conduct of the Subjects of God's moral Government, wisely adapted thereto; either providing for what should be in a suture State of Things, through the Volitions and voluntary Actions of moral Agents, or consequent upon them, and regulated and ordered according to them. So that all Events that are foretold, are either moral Events, or other Events which are connected with, and accommodated to moral Events.

That the Predictions of Scripture in general must be without Knowledge, if God don't foresee the Volitions of Men, will further appear, if it be confidered, that almost all Events belonging to the future State of the World of Mankind, the Changes and Revolutions which come to pass in Empires, Kingdoms, and Nations, and all Societies, depend innumerable Ways on the Acts of Men's Wills; yea, on an innumerable Multitude of Millions of Millions of Velitions of Mankind. Such is the State and Course of Things in the World of Mankind, that one fingle Event, which appears in it felf exceeding inconfiderable, may in the Progress and Series of Things, occasion a Succession of the greatest and most important and extenfive Events; caufing the State of Mankind to be vally different from what it would otherwise have been, for all fucceeding Generations.

For Instance, the coming into Existence of those particular Men, who have been the great Conquerors of the World, which under God have had the main Hand in all the consequent State of the World, in all after-Ages; such as Nebuchad-mexar, Cyrus, Alexander, Pompey, Julius Casar, &c. undoubtedly depended on many Millions of Acts of the Will, which followed, and were occasion'd one by another, in their Parents. And perhaps most of these Volitions depended on Millions of Volitions of Hundreds and Thousands of others, their Contemporaries of the same Generation; and most of these on Millions of Millions of Volitions of others in preceeding Generations .--- As we go back, still the Number of Volitions, which were fome Way the Occasion of the Event, multiply as the Branches of a River, 'till they come at last, as it were, to an infinite Number. This will not feem strange, to any one who well considers the Matter; if we recollect what Philosophers tell us of the innumerable Multitudes of those Things which are as it were the Principia, or Stamina Visa, concerned in Generation; the Animalcula in Semine masculo, and the Ova in the Womb of the Female; the Impregnation, or animating of one of these in Distinction from all the rest, must depend on Things infinitely minute, relating to the Time and Circumstances of the Act of the Parents, the State of their Bodies, &c. which must depend on innumerable foregoing Circumstances and Occurrences; which must depend, infinite Ways, on foregoing Acts of their Wills; which are occasioned by innumerable Things that happen in the Course of their Lives, in which their own, and their Neighbour's Behaviour, must have a Hand, an infinite Number of Ways. And as the Volitions of others must be so many Ways concerned in the Conception and Birth of fuch Men; fo, no less, in their Prefervation, and Circumstances of Life, their particular Determinations and Actions, on which the great Revolutions they were the Occasions of, depended. As for Instance, When the Conspirators in Persia, against the Mag., were confulting about a Succession to the Empire, it came into the Mind of one of them, to propose, that he whose Horse neighed first, when they came together the next Morning, should be King. Now fuch a Thing's coming into his Mind, might depend on innumerable Incidents, wherein the Volitions of Mankind had been concerned. But in Consequence of this Accident, Darius, the Son of Histaspes, was King. And if this had not been, probably his Successor would not have been the fame, and all the Circumstances of the Persian Empire might have been far otherwife. And then perhaps Alexander might never have conquered that Empire. And then probably the Circumstances of the World in all succeeding Ages, might have been vastly otherwise. I might further instance in many other Occurrences; fuch as those on which depended Alexander's Preservation, in the many critical Junctures of his Life, wherein a small Trifle would have turned the Scale against him; and the Preservation and Success of the Roman People, in the Infancy of their Kingdom and Common-Wealth, and afterwards; which all the fucceeding Changes in their State, and the mighty Revolutions that afterwards came to pass in the habitable World, depended upon But these Hints may be fufficient for every differning confiderate Person, to convince him, that the whole State of the World of Mankind, in all Ages, and the very Being of every Person who has ever lived in it, in every Age, fince the Times of the ancient Prophets, has depended on more Volitions, or Acts of the Wills of Men, than there are Sands on the Sea-shoar.

And therefore, unless God does most exactly and perfectly foresee the future Acts of Men's Wills, all the Predictions which he ever uttered concerning David, Hezekiah, Josiah, Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Alexander; concerning the four Monarchies, narchies, and the Revolutions in them; and concerning all the Wars, Commotions, Victories, Prosperities and Calamities, of any of the Kingdoms, Nations, or Communities of the World, have all been without Knowledge.

So that, according to this Notion of God's not forefeeing the Volitions and free Actic is of Men. God could foresee Nothing pertaining to the State of the World of Mankind in future Ages; not fo much as the Being of one Person that should live in it; and could foreknow no Events, but only fuch as He would bring to pass Himself by the extraordinary Interpolition of his immediate Power; or Things which should come to pass in the natural material World, by the Laws of Motion, and Course of Nature, wherein that is independent on the Actions or Works of Mankind: That is, as he might, like a very able Mathematician and Aftronomer, with great Exactness calculate the Revolutions of the heavenly Bodies, and the greater Wheels of the Machine of the external Creation.

And if we closely consider the Matter, there will appear Reason to convince us, that he could not with any absolute Certainty foresee even these. As to the First, namely, Things done by the immediate and extraordinary Interposition of God's Power, these can't be foreseen, unless it can be foreseen when there shall be Occasion for such extraordinary Interposition. And that can't be soreseen, unless the State of the moral World can be foreseen. For whenever God thus interposes, it is with Regard to the State of the moral World, requiring such Divine Interposition. Thus God could not certainly foresee the universal D suge, the Calling of Abraham, the Destruction of Section and and Gomerrah, the Plagues on Egypt, and Ifrael's Redemption out of it, the expelling the feven Nations of Canaan, and the bringing Ifrael into that Land; for these all are represented as connected with Things belonging to the State of the moral World. Nor can God foreknow the most proper and convenient Time of the Day of Judgment, and general Conflagration; for that chiefly depends on the Course and State of Things in the moral World.

Nor, Secondly, can we on this Supposition reafonably think, that God can certainly foresee what Things shall come to pass, in the Course of Things, in the natural and material World, even those which in an ordinary State of Things might be calculated by a good Astronomer. For the moral World is the End of the natural World; and the Course of Things in the former, is undoubtedly subordinate to God's Designs with Respect to the latter. Therefore he has seen Cause, from Regard to the State of Things in the moral World, extraordinarily to interpose, to interrupt and lay an Arrest on the Course of Things in the natural World; and even in the greater Wheels of it's Motion; even so as to stop the Sun in it's Courfe. And unless he can foresee the Volitions of Men, and fo know fomething of the future State of the moral World, He can't know but that he may still have as great Occasion to interpose in this Manner, as ever he had: nor can He foresee how, or when, He shall have Occasion thus to interpole.

Corol. 1. It appears from the Things which have been observed, that unless God foresecs the Volitions of moral Agents, that cannot be true which is observed by the Apostle James, Act. xv.

18. Known unto God are all his Works from the Beginning of the World.

Corol. 2. It appears from what has been observed, that unless God foreknows the Volitions of moral Agents, all the Prophecies of Scripture have no better Foundation than meer Conjecture; and That, in most Instances, a Conjecture which must have the utmost Uncertainty; depending on an innumerable, and as it were infinite, Multitude of Volitions, which are all, even to God, uncertain Events: However, these Prophecies are delivered as absolute Predictions, and very many of them in the most positive Manner, with Asseverations; and some of them with the most solemn Oaths.

Corol. 3. It also follows from what has been obferved, that if this Notion of God's Ignorance of future Volitions be true, in vain did Christ fay (after uttering many great and important Predictions, concerning God's moral Kingdom, and Things depending on Men's moral Actions) Mai. xxiv. 3;. Heaven and Earth shall pass away; but my Words shall not pass away.

Corol. 4. From the same Notion of God's Ignorance, it would follow, that in vain has God himself often spoken of the Predictions of his Word, as Evidences of his Foreknowlege; and so as Evidences of that which is his Prerogative as GOD, and his peculiar Glory, greatly diftinguishing Him from all other Beings; as in Isai. xli. 22--26. xliii. 9, 10. xliv. 8. xlv. 21. xlvi. 10. & xlviii. 14.

ARGUM. II. If God don't foreknow the Volitions of moral Agents, then he did not foreknow the Fall of Man, nor of Angels, and fo could not fore.

158 GOD certainly foreknows Part II.

foreknow the great Things which are consequent on these Events; such as his sending his Son into the World to die for Sinners, and all Things pertaining to the great Work of Redemption; all the Things which were done for four Thousand Years before Christ came, to prepare the Way for it; and the Incarnation, Life, Death, Refurrection and Ascension of Christ; and the setting Him at the Head of the Universe, as King of Heaven and Earth, Angels and Men; and the fetting up his Church and Kingdom in this World, and appointing Him the Judge of the World; and all that Satan should do in the World in Opposition to the Kingdom of Christ: And the great Transactions of the Day of Judgment, that Men and Devils shall be the Subjects of, and Angels concerned in; they are all what God was ignorant of before the Fall. And if so, the following Scriptures, and others like them, must be without any Meaning, or contrary to Truth. Eph. i. 4. According as he bath chosen us in Him before the Foundation of the World. I Pet. i. 20. IV ho verily was fore-ordained before the Foundation of the World. 2 Tim. i. 9. Who bath faved us, and called us with an holy Callir's, not according to our Works, but according to his own Purpose, and Grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the World began. So, Eph. iii. 11. (speaking of the Wisdom of God in the Work of Redemption) according to the eternal Purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus. Tit. i. 2. In hope of eternal Life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the World began. Rom. viii. 29. Whom he did foreknow, them he asso did predestinate, &cc. 1 Pct. i.2. Elect, according to the Foreknowledge of God the Father.

If God did not foreknow the Fall of Man, nor the Redemption by Jelus Chrift, nor the Volitions of Man fince the Fall; then He did not foreknow the Saints in any Sense; neither as particular Perfons, nor as Societies or Nations; either by Election, or meer Forefight of their Vertue or good Works; or any Forefight of any Thing about them relating to their Salvation; or any Benefit they have by Christ, or any Manner of Concern of their's with a Redeemer.

ARG. III. On the Supposition of God's Ignorance of the future Volitions of free Agents, it will follow, that God must in many Cases truly repent what He has done, fo as properly to wish He had done otherwife: by Realon that the Event of Things, in those Affairs which are most important, viz. the Affairs of his moral Kingdom, being uncertain and contingent, often happens quite otherwise than he was aware before-hand. And there would be Reason to understand. That in the most literal Sense, in Gen. vi. 6. It repented the Lord, that he had made Man on the Earth, and it grieved him at his Heart. And that, I Sam. xv. 11. contrary to that, Numb. xxiii. 19. God is not the Son of Man, that he should repent. And I Sam. xv. 15, 29. Also the Strength of Hirael will not he, nor repent: for he is not a Man that he should repent. Yea, from this Notion it would follow, that God is liable to repent and be grieved at his Heart, in a literal Sense, continually; and is always enposed to an infinite Number of real Disappointments in his governing the World; and to manifold, constant, great Perplexity and Vexation: But this is not very confifient with his Title of God over all, bleffed for evermore; which represents Him as possessed of perfect, constant, and trin terrupted Tranquility and Felicity, as God over the Universe, and in his Manas, ment of the Affairs of the World, as furteme and univertal 160 GOD certainly foreknows Part II. Ruler. See Rom. i. 25. ix. 5. 2 Cor. xi. 31, 1 Tim. vi. 15.

ARG. IV. It will also follow from this Notion, that as God is liable to be continually repenting what He has done; fo He must be exposed to be constantly changing his Mind and Intentions, as to his future Conduct; altering his Measures, relinquishing his old Designs, and forming new Schemes and Projections. For his Purposes, even as to the main Parts of his Schenie, namely, fuch as belong to the State of his moral Kingdom, must be always liable to be broken, through Want of Forefight; and he must be continually putting his System to rights, as it gets out of Order, through the Contingence of the Actions of moral Agents: He must be a Being, who, instead of being absolutely immutable, must necessarily be the Subject of infinitely the most numerous Acts of Repentance, and Changes of Intention, of any Being whatfoever; for this plain Reason, that his vastly extensive Charge comprehends an infinitely greater Number of those Things which are to Him contingent and uncertain. In fuch a Situation, He must have little else to do, but to mend broken Links as well as he can, and be rectifying his disjointed Frame and difordered Movements, in the best Manner the Case will allow. The supream Lord of all Things must needs be under great and miserable Disadvantages, in governing the World which He has made, and has the Care of, through his being utterly unable to find out Things of chief Importance, which hereafter shall befall his System; which if He did but know, He might make feafonable Provision for. In many Cases, there may be very great Necessity that He should make Provision, in the Manner of his ordering and disposing Things, for some great Events which are to happen, of vast and extensive Influence, and endless Consequence to the Universe; which He may see afterwards when it is too late, and may wish in vain that he had known before-hand, that He might have ordered his Affairs accordingly. And it is in the Power of Man, on these Principles, by his Devices, Purposes and Actions, thus to disappoint God, break his Measures, make Him continually to change his Mind, subject Him to Vexation, and bring Him into Confusion.

But how do these Things consist with Reason, or with the Word of God? Which represents, that all God's Works, all that He has ever to do, the whole Scheme and Series of his Operations, are from the Beginning perfectly in his View; and declares, that whatever Devices and Designs are in the Hearts of Men, the Counsel of the Lord is that which shall stand, and the Thoughts of his Heart to all Generations. Prov. xix. 21. Pfal. xxxiii. 10, 11. And that which the Lord of Hosts hath purposed, none shall disannul, Isai. xiv. 27. And that he cannot be frustrated in one Design or Thought, Job xlii. 2. And that which God doth, it shall be forever, that Nothing can be put to it, or taken from it, Eccl. iii. 14. The Stability and Perpetuity of God's Counfels are exprefly spoken of as connected with the Foreknowledge of God, Isai. xlvi. 10. Declaring the End from the Beginning, and from ancient Times the Things that are not yet done; faying, My Counsel shall stand, and I will do all my Pleasure .--- And how are these Things confiftent with what the Scripture fays of God's Immutability, which represents Him as without Variableness, or shadow of Turning; and fpeaks of Him most particularly as unchangeable with Regard to his Purposes, Atal. iii. 6. I am the Lord; I change not; therefore ye Sons of Jacob are M 1:01 not consumed. Exod. iii. 14. I AM THAT I AM. Job xxiii. 13, 14. He is in one Mind; and who can turn Him? And what his Soul desireth, even that he doth: for he performeth the Thing that is appointed for me.

Arg. V. If this Notion of God's Ignorance of future Volitions of moral Agents be thoroughly confidered in it's Consequences, it will appear to follow from it, that God, after he had made the World, was liable to be wholly frustrated of bis End in the Creation of it; and so has been in like Manner liable to be frustrated of his End in all the great Works He hath wrought. 'Tis manifest, the moral World is the End of the natural: The rest of the Creation is but an House which God hath built, with Furniture, for moral Agents: And the good or bad State of the moral World depends on the Improvement they make of their natural Agency, and fo depends on their Volitions. And therefore, if these can't be foreseen by God, because they are contingent, and subject to no Kind of Necessity, then the Affairs of the moral World are liable to go wrong, to any affignable Degree; yea, liable to be utterly ruined. As on this Scheme, it may well be supposed to be literally faid, when Mankind, by the Abuse of their moral Agency, became very corrupt before the Flood, that the Lord repented that he had made Man on the Earth, and it grieved Him at his Heart; fo, when He made the Universe, He did not know but that he might be so disappointed in it, that it might grieve Him at his Heart that he had made It actually proved, that all Mankind became finful, and a very great Part of the Angels apoftatifed: And how could God know before-hand, that all of them would not? And how could God know but that all Mankind, notwithstanding Means Means used to reclaim them, being still left to the Freedom of their own Will, would continue in their Apostacy, and grow worse and worse, as they of the Old World before the Flood did?

According to the Scheme I am endeavouring to confute, neither the Fall of Men nor Angels, could be foreseen, and God must be greatly disappointed in these Events; and so the grand Scheme and Contrivance for our Redemption, and destroying the Works of the Devil, by the Messiah, and all the great Things God has done in the Profecution of these Designs, must be only the Fruits of his own Disappointment, and Contrivances of his to mend and patch up, as well as he could, his Syftem, which originally was all very good, and perfectly beautiful; but was mar'd, broken and confounded by the free Will of Angels and Men. And still he must be liable to be totally disappointed a second Time: He could not know, that He should have his defired Success, in the Incarnation, Life, Death, Refurrection and Exaltation of his only begotten Son, and other great Works accomplished to restore the State of Things: He could not know after all, whether there would actually be any tolerable Measure of Restoration; for this depended on the free Will of Man. There has been a general great Apoftacy of almost all the Christian World, to that which was worse than Heathenism; which continued for many Ages. And how could God, without forefeeing Men's Volitions, know whether ever Christendom would return from this Apostacy? And which way could He tell beforehand how foon it would begin? The Apostle says, it began to work in his Time; and how could it be known how far it would proceed in that Age? Yea, how could it be known that the Goipel, M 2 which was not effectual for the Reformation of the Jews, would ever be effectual for the turning of the Heathen Nations from their Heathen Appollacy, which they had been confirmed in for fo many Ages?

'Tis represented often in Scripture, that God who made the World for Himself, and created it for his Pleasure, would infallibly obtain his End in the Creation, and in all his Works; that as all Things are of Him, so they would all be to Him; and that in the final Issue of Things, it would appear that He is the first, and the last. Rev. xxi. 6. And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End, the first and the last. But these Things are not consistent with God's being so liable to be disappointed in all his Works, nor indeed with his failing of his End in any Thing that He has undertaken, or done.

SECTION XII.

GOD's certain Foreknowledge of the future Volitions of moral Agents, inconfishent with fuch a Contingence of those Volitions, as is without all Necessity.

AVING proved, that GOD has a certain and infallible Prescience of the Acts of the Will of moral Agents, I come now, in the Second Place, to shew the Consequence; to shew how it follows from hence, that these Events are necessary, with a Necessity of Connection or Consequence.

The chief Arminian Divines, fo far as I have had Opportunity to observe, deny this Consequence; and assirm, that if such Foreknowledge be allowed, 'tis no Evidence of any Necessity of the Event foreknown. Now I defire, that this Matter may be particularly and thoroughly enquired into. I cannot but think, that on particular and full Consideration, it may be perfectly determined, whether it be indeed so, or not.

In order to a proper Confideration of this Matter, I would observe the following Things.

- I. 'Tis very evident, with regard to a Thing whose Existence is infallibly and indisfolubly connected with something which already hath, or has had Existence, the Existence of that Thing is necessary. Here may be noted,
- 1. I observed before; in explaing the Nature of Necessary; that in Things which are past, their past Existence is now necessary: having already made sure of Existence, 'tis too late for any Possibility of Alteration in that Respect: 'Tis now impossible, that it should be otherwise than true, that that Thing has existed.
- 2. If there be any fuch Thing as a divine Fore-knowledge of the Volitions of free Agents, that Foreknowledge, by the Supposition, is a Thing which already has, and long ago had Existence; and so, now it's Existence is necessary; it is now utterly impossible to be otherwise, than that this Foreknowledge should be, or should have been.
- 3. 'Tis also very manifest, that those Things which are indissolubly connected with other Things that are necessary, are Themselves necessary. As that Proposition whose Truth is necessarily connected with another Proposition, which is necessarily true, is itself necessarily true. To say M 3 other-otherwise, would be a Contradiction: it would be in Effect to say, that the Connection was indissoluble, and yet was not so, but might be broken. If That, whose Existence is indissolubly connected with something whose Existence is now necessary, is itself not necessary, then it may possibly not exist, notwithstanding that indissoluble Connection of it's Existence.----Whether the Absurdity ben't glaring, let the Reader judge.

4. 'Tis no less evident, that if there be a full, certain and infallible Foreknowledge of the future Existence of the Volitions of moral Agents, then there is a certain infallible and indissoluble Connection between those Events and that Foreknowledge; and that therefore, by the preceeding Observations, those Events are necessary Events; being infallibly and indissolubly connected with that whose Existence already is, and so is now necessary, and can't but have been.

To fay, the Foreknowledge is certain and infallible, and yet the Connection of the Event with that Foreknowledge is not indiffoluble, but diffoluble and fallible, is very abfurd. To affirm it, would be the fame Thing as to affirm, that there is no necessary Connection between a Proposition's being infallibly known to be true, and it's being true indeed. So that it is perfectly demonstrable, that if there be any infallible Knowledge of future Volitions, the Event is necessary; or, in other Words, that it is impossible but the Event should come to pass. For if it ben't impossible but that it may be otherwise, then it is not imposfible but that the Proposition which affirms it's future coming to pass, may not now be true. But how abfurd is that, on the Supposition that there is now an infallible Knowledge (i. e. Knowledge ledge which it is impossible should fail) that it is true. There is this Absurdity in it, that it is not impossible but that there now should be no Truth in that Proposition, which is now infallibly known to be true.

II. That no future Event can be certainly foreknown, whose Existence is contingent, and without all Necessity, may be proved thus; 'Tis impossible for a Thing to be certainly known to any Intellect without Evidence. To suppose otherwise, implies a Contradiction: Because for a Thing to be certainly known to any Understanding, is for it to be evident to that Understanding: And for a Thing to be evident to any Understanding, is the fame Thing, as for that Understanding to fee Evidence of it: But no Understanding, created or increated, can see Evidence where there is none: For that is the same Thing, as to see that to be, which is not. And therefore, if there be any Truth which is absolutely without Evidence, that Truth is absolutely unknowable, insomuch that it implies a Contradiction to suppose that it is known.

But if there be any future Event, whose Existence is contingent, without all Necessity, the future Existence of the Event is absolutely without Evidence. If there be any Evidence of it, it must be one of these two Sorts, either Self-Evidence, or Proof; for there can be no other Sort of Evidence but one of these two; an evident Thing must be either evident in it self, or evident in something else; that is, evident by Connection with something else. But a future Thing, whose Existence is without all Necessity, can have neither of these Sorts of Evidence. It can't be Self-evident: For if it be, it may be now known by what is now to be seen in the Thing it self; either it's present Existence, or the Necessity of it's Nature: But both these are contrary to the Supposition. It is supposed, both that the Thing has no present Existence to be seen; and also that it is not of such a Nature as to be necessarily existent for the future: So that it's future Existence is not Self-evident. And secondly, neither is there any Proof, or Evidence in any Thing else, or Evidence of Connection with fomething else that is evident; For this also is contrary to the Supposition. 'Tis supposed, that there is now Nothing existent, with which the future Existence of the centingent Event is connected. For fuch a Connection destroys its Contingence, and supposes Necessity. Thus 'tis demonstrated, that there is in the Nature of Things absolutely no Evidence at all of the future Existence of that Event, which is contingent, without all Necessity (if any fuch Event there be) neither Self-Evidence nor Proof. And therefore the Thing in Reality is not evident; and fo can't be feen to be evident, or, which is the fame Thing, can't be known.

Let us consider this in an Example. Suppose that five Thousand seven Hundred and sixty Years ago, there was no other Being but the divine Being; and then this World, or fome particular Body or Spirit, all at once ftarts out of Nothing into Being, and takes on it felf a particular Nature and Form; all in absolute Contingence, without any Concern of God, or any other Cause, in the Matter; without any Manner of Ground or Reason of it's Existence; or any Dependence upon, or Connection at all with any Thing foregoing: I fay, that if this be supposed, there was no Evidence of that Event before-hand. There was no Evidence of it to be seen in the Thing it self; for the Thing it felf, as yet, was not. And there was no Evidence Evidence of it to be feen in any Thing else; for Evidence in something else, is Connection with something else: But such Connection is contrary to the Supposition. There was no Evidence before, that this Thing would happen; for by the Supposition, there was no Reason why it should happen, rather than fomething else, or rather than Nothing. And if so, then all Things before were exactly equal, and the same, with Respect to that and other possible Things; there was no Preponderation, no fuperiour Weight or Value; and therefore Nothing that could be of any Weight or Value to determine any Understanding. The Thing was absolutely without Evidence, and absolutely unknowable. An Increase of Understanding, or of the Capacity of Difcerning, has no Tendency, and makes no Advance, to a difcerning any Signs or Evidences of it, let it be increased never so much; yea, if it be increased infinitely. The Increase of the Strength of Sight may have a Tendency to enable to discern the Evidence which is far off, and very much hid, and deeply involved in Clouds and Darkness; but it has no Tendency to enable to difcern Evidence where there is none. Sight be infinitely flrong, and the Capacity of Difcerning infinitely great, it will enable to fee all that there is, and to fee it perfectly, and with Ease; yet it has no Tendency at all to enable a Being to discern that Evidence which is not; But on the contrary, it has a Tendency to enable to difcern with great Certainty that there is none.

III. To suppose the future Volitions of moral Agents not to be necessary Events; or, which is the same Thing, Events which it is not impossible but that they may not come to pass; and yet to suppose that God certainly foreknows them, and knows all Things; is to suppose God's Knowledge

170 Certain Foreknowledge, &c. Part IL. to be inconfistent with it self. For to say, that God certainly, and without all Conjecture, knows that a Thing will infallibly be, which at the fame Time he knows to be so contingent, that it may possibly not be, is to suppose his Knowledge inconfistent with it self; or that one Thing that he knows is utterly inconsistent with another Thing that he knows. 'Tis the same Thing as to say, He now knows a Proposition to be of certain infallible Truth, which he knows to be of contingent uncertain Truth. If a future Volition is fo without all Necessity, that there is nothing hinders but that it may not be, then the Proposition which afferts it's future Existence, is so uncertain, that there is Nothing hinders but that the Truth of it may entirely fail. And if God knows all Things, He knows this Proposition to be thus uncertain. And that is inconfistent with his knowing that it is infallibly true; and so inconsistent with his infallibly knowing that it is true. If the Thing be indeed contingent, God views it fo, and judges it to be contingent, if he views Things as they are. If the Event be not necessary, then it is possible it may never be: And if it be possible it may never be, God knows it may possibly never be; and that is to know that the Proposition which affirms it's Existence, may possibly not be true; and that is to know that the Truth of it is uncertain; which surely is inconsistent with his knowing it as a certain Truth. If Volitions are in Themselves contingent Events, without all Necessity, then 'tis no Argument of Persection of Knowledge in any Being to determine peremptorily that they will be; but on the contrary, an Argument of Ignorance and Mistake: Because it would argue, that he supposes that Proposition to be certain, which in it's own Nature, and all Things considered, is uncertain and contingent. To say in such a Case, that God may have Ways of knowing contingent Events which we can't conceive of, is ridiculous; as much fo, as to fay, that God may know Contradictions to be true, for ought we know, or that he may know a Thing to be certain, and at the fame Time know it not to be certain, tho' we can't conceive how; because he has Ways of knowing, which we can't comprehend.

Corol. 1. From what has been observed it is evident, that the absolute Decrees of God are no more inconfiftent with human Liberty, on Account of any Necessity of the Event which follows from fuch Decrees, than the absolute Foreknowledge of God. Because the Connection between the Event and certain Foreknowledge, is as infallible and indiffoluble, as between the Event and an absolute Decree. That is, 'tis no more impossible that the Event and Decree should not agree together, than that the Event and absolute Knowledge should disagree. The Connection between the Event and Foreknowledge is abfolutely perfect, by the Supposition: because it is suppofed, that the Certainty and Infallibity of the Knowledge is abfolutely perfect. And it being fo, the Cértainty can't be increased; and therefore the Connnection between the Knowledge and Thing known, can't be increased; so that if a Decree be added to the Foreknowledge, it don't at all increase the Connection, or make it more infallible and indiffoluble. If it were not fo, the Certainty of Knowledge might be increased by the Addition of a Decree; which is contrary to the Supposition, which is, that the Knowledge is absolutely perfect, or perfect to the highest possible Degree.

172 Foreknowledge infers Necessity, Part II.

There is as much of an Impossibility but that the Things which are infallibly foreknown, should be, or (which is the same Thing) as great a Necessity of their future Existence, as if the Event were already written down, and was known and read by all Mankind, thro' all preceeding Ages, and there were the most indissoluble and perfect Connection possible, between the Writing, and the Thing written. In such a Case, it would be as impossible the Event should fail of Existence, as if it had existed already; and a Decree can't make an Event surer or more necessary than this.

And therefore, if there be any fuch Foreknow-ledge, as it has been proved there is, then Neceffity of Connection and Confequence, is not at all inconfistent with any Liberty which Man, or any other Creature enjoys. And from hence it may be infer'd, that absolute Decrees of God, which don't at all increase the Necessity, are not at all inconfistent with the Liberty which Man enjoys, on any such Account, as that they make the Event decreed necessary, and render it utterly impossible but that it should come to pass. Therefore if absolute Decrees are inconsistent with Man's Liberty as a moral Agent, or his Liberty in a State of Probation, or any Liberty whatsoever that he enjoys, it is not on Account of any Necessity which absolute Decrees infer.

Dr. Whithy supposes, there is a great Difference between God's Foreknowledge, and his Decrees, with Regard to Necessity of future Events. In his Discourse on the five Points, P. 474, &c. He says, "God's Prescience has no Influence at all on our Actions.—Should God (says he) by immediate Revelation, give me the Knowledge of the Event of any Man's State or Actions, "would

"would my Knowledge of them have any In-"fluence upon his Actions? Surely none at all. —. " Our Knowledge doth not affect the Things we "know, to make them more certain, or more " future, than they would be without it. Now "Foreknowledge in God is Knowledge. As " therefore Knowledge has no Influence on Things "that are, fo neither has Foreknowledge on "Things that shall be. And consequently, the " Foreknowledge of any Action that would be " otherwise free, cannot alter or diminish that " Freedom. Whereas God's Decree of Election " is powerful and active, and comprehends the " Preparation and Exhibition of fuch Means, as " shall unfrustrably produce the End. — Hence "God's Prescience renders no Actions necessary." And to this Purpose, P. 473. he cites Origen, where he fays, God Prescience is not the Cause of Things future, but their being suture is the Cause of God's Prescience that they will be: And Le Blanc, where he fays, This is the truest Resolution of this Difficulty, that Prescience is not the Cause that Things are future; but their being future is the Cause they are foreseen. In like Manner Dr. Clark, in his Demonstration of the Being and Attributes of God, P. 95-99. And the Author of the Freedom of Will, in God and the Creature, speaking to the like Purpose with Dr. Whithy, represents Foreknowledge as having no more Influence on Things known, to make them necessary, than After-Knowledge, or to that Purpose.

To all which I would fay; That what is faid about Knowledge, it's not having Influence on the Thing known to make it necessary, is Nothing to the Purpose, nor does it in the least affect the foregoing Reasoning. Whether Prescience be the Thing that makes the Event necessary or no, it alters not the Case. Infallible Foreknowledge may prove the Necessity of the Event foreknown, and yet not be the Thing which causes the Necessity. If the Foreknowledge be absolute, this proves the Event known to be necessary, or proves that 'tis impossible but that the Event should be, by some Means or other, either by a Decree, or some other Way, if there be any other Way: Because, as was said before, 'tis absurd to say, that a Proposition is known to be certainly and infallibly true, which yet may possibly prove not true.

The whole of the feeming Force of this Evafion lies in this; that, in as much as certain Foreknowledge don't eause an Event to be necessary, as a Decree does; therefore it don't prove it to be necessary, as a Decree does. But there is no Force in this arguing: For it is built wholly on this Supposition, that Nothing can prove, or be an Evidence of a Thing's being necessary, but that which has a causal Influence to make it so. But this can never be maintained. If certain Foreknowledge of the future existing of an Event, be not the Thing which first makes it impossible that it should fail of Existence; yet it may, and certainly does demonstrate, that it is impossible it should fail of it, however that Impossibility comes. If Foreknowledge be not the Cause, but the Essect of this Impossibility, it may prove that there is such an Impossibility, as much as if it were the Cause. It is as strong arguing from the Effect to the Cause, as from the Cause to the Effect. 'Tis enough, that an Existence which is infallibly foreknown, cannot fail, whether that Impossibility arises from the Foreknowledge, or is prior to it. 'Tis as evident, as 'tis possible any Thing should be, that it is imposible a Thing which is infallibly known to be true, should prove not to be true: therefore there is a Necessity that it should be otherwise; whether the

the Knowledge be the Caufe of this Necessity, or the Necessity the Cause of the Knowledge.

All certain Knowledge, whether it be Fore-knowledge or After-Knowledge, or concomitant Knowledge, proves the Thing known now to be necessary, by some Means or other; or proves that it is impossible it should now be otherwise than true.—I freely allow, that Foreknowledge don't prove a Thing to be necessary any more than After - Knowledge: But then After-Knowledge which is certain and infallible, proves that 'tis now become impossible but that the Proposition known should be true. Certain After-Knowledge proves that it is now, in the Time of the Knowledge, by fome Means or other, become impossible but that the Proposition which predicates past Existence on the Event, should be true. And so does certain Foreknowledge prove, that now, in the Time of the Knowledge, it is by fome Means or other, become impossible but that the Propofition which predicates future Existence on the Event, should be true. The Necessity of the Truth of the Propositions, confising in the prefent Impossibility of the Non-existence of the Event affirmed, in both Cases, is the immediate Ground of the certainty of the Knowledge; there can be no certainty of Knowledge without it.

There must be a Certainty in Things themselves, before they are certainly known, or (which is the same Thing) known to be certain. For Certainty of Knowledge is nothing else but knowing or discerning the Certainty there is in the Things themselves which are known. Therefore there must be a Certainty in Things to be a Ground of Certainty of Knowledge, and to render Things capable of being known to be certain. And this is Nothing but the Necessity of the Truth known, or it's be-176 Foreknowledge infers Necessity, Part II. ing impossible but that it should be true; or, in other Words, the firm and infallible Connection between the Subject and Predicate of the Propofition that contains that Truth. All Certainty of Knowledge confifts in the View of the Firmness of that Connection. So God's certain Foreknowledge of the future Existence of any Event, is his View of the firm and indiffoluble Connection of the Subject and Predicate of the Proposition that affirms it's future Existence. The Subject is that possible Event; the Predicate is it's future existing: But if future Existence be firmly and indiffolubly connected with that Event, then the future Existence of that Event is necessary. If God certainly knows the future Existence of an Event which is wholly contingent, and may possibly never be, then He sees a firm Connection between a Subject and Predicate that are not firmly connected; which is a Contradiction.

I allow what Dr. Whithy fays to be true, That meer Knowledge don't affect the Thing known, to make it more certain or more future. But yet, I fay, it fupposes and proves the Thing to be already, both future, and certain; i. e. necessarily future. Knowledge of Futurity, supposes Futurity; and a certain Knowledge of Futurity, supposes certain Futurity, antecedent to that certain Knowledge. But there is no other certain Futurity of a Thing, antecedent to Certainty of Knowledge, than a prior Impossibility but that the Thing should prove true; or (which is the same Thing) the Necessity of the Event.

I would observe one Thing further concerning this Matter, and it is this; That if it be as those foremention'd Writers suppose, that God's Foreknowledge is not the Cause, but the Effect of the Existence

Existence of the Event foreknown; this is so far from shewing that this Foreknowledge don't infer the Necessity of the Existence of that Event, that it rather shews the contrary the more plainly. Because it shews the Existence of the Event to be fo fettled and firm, that it is as if it had already been; in as much as in Effect it actually exists already; it's future Existence has already had actual Influence and Efficiency, and has produced an Effect, viz. Prescience: The Effect exists already; and as the Effect supposes the Cause, is connected with the Cause, and depends entirely upon it, therefore it is as if the future Event, which is the Cause, had existed already. The Effect is firm as possible, it having already the Possession of Existence, and has made sure of it. But the Effect can't be more firm and stable than it's Cause, Ground and Reason. The Building can't be firmer than the Foundation.

To illustrate this Matter, let us suppose the Appearances and Images of Things in a Glass; for Instance, a reflecting Telescope to be the real Effects of heavenly Bodies (at a Distance, and out of Sight) which they resemble: If it be so, then, as these Images in the Telescope have had a past actual Existence, and it is become utterly impossible now that it should be otherwise than that they have existed; so they being the true Effects of the heavenly Bodies they retemble, this proves the existing of those heavenly Bodies to be as real, infallible, firm and necessary, as the existing of these Effects; the one being connected with, and wholly depending on the other.—Now let us fuppose future Existences some Way or other to have Influence back, to produce Effects before-hand, and cause exact and perfect Images of themselves in a Glass, a Thousand Years before they exist, yea, yea, in all preceeding Ages; But yet that these Images are real Effects of these future Existences, perfectly dependent on, and connected with their Cause; these Effects and Images, having already had actual Existence, rendring that Matter of their Existing perfectly firm and stable, and utterly impossible to be otherwise, this proves in like Manner as in the other Instance, that the Existence of the Things which are their Causes, is also equally fure, firm and necessary; and that it is alike impossible but that they should be, as if they had been already, as their Effects have. And if instead of Images in a Glass, we suppose the antecedent Effects to be perfect Ideas of them in the divine Mind, which have existed there from all Eternity, which are as properly Effects, as truly and properly connected with their Cause, the Case is not altered.

Another Thing which has been faid by some Arminians, to take off the Force of what is urged from God's Prescience, against the Contingence of the Volitions of moral Agents, is to this Purpose; "That when we talk of Foreknowledge in God, there is no strict Propriety in our so speaking; and that altho' it be true, that there is in God the most perfect Knowledge of all E-vents from Eternity to Eternity, yet there is no such Thing as before and after in God, but He sees all Things by one perfect unchangeable View, without any Succession."——To this I answer,

1. It has been already shewn, that all certain Knowledge proves the Necessity of the Truth-known; whether it be before, after, or at the same Time.—Tho' it be true, that there is no Succession in God's Knowledge, and the Manner of his Knowledge is to us inconceivable, yet thus much we know know concerning it, that there is no Event, past, present, or to come, that God is ever uncertain of; He never is, never was, and never will be without infallible Knowledge of it; He always fees the Existence of it to be certain and infallible. And as he always fees Things just as they are in Truth; hence there never is in Reality any Thing contingent in fuch a Sense, as that possibly it may happen never to exist. If, strictly speaking, there is no Foreknowledge in God, 'tis because those Things which are future to us, are as present to God, as if they already had Existence: and that is as much as to fay, that future Events are always in God's View as evident, clear, fure and necesfary, as if they already were. If there never is a Time wherein the Existence of the Event is not prefent with God, then there never is a Time wherein it is not as much impossible for it to fail of Existence, as if it's Existence were present, and were already come to pass.

God's viewing Things fo perfectly and unchangeably as that there is no Succession in his Ideas or Judgment, don't hinder but that there is properly now, in the Mind of God, a certain and perfect Knowledge of the moral Actions of Men, which to us are an Hundred Years hence: yea the Objection supposes this; and therefore it certainly don't hinder but that, by the foregoing Arguments, it is now impossible these moral Actions should not come to pass.

We know, that God knows the future voluntary Actions of Men in fuch a Sense before-hand, as that he is able particularly to declare, and fore-tell them, and write them, or cause them to be written down in a Book, as He often has done; and that therefore the necessary Connection which there is between God's Knowledge and the Event. known, does as much prove the Event to be neceffary before-hand, as if the divine Knowledge were in the same Sense before the Event, as the Prediction or Writing is. If the Knowledge be infallible, then the Expression of it in the written Prediction is infallible; that is, there is an infallible Connection between that written Prediction and the Event. And if fo, then it is impossible it should ever be otherwise, than that that Prediction and the Event should agree: And this is the same Thing as to fay, 'tis impossible but that the Event should come to pass: and this is the same as to fay, that it's coming to pass is necessary. So that it is manifest, that there being no proper Succession in God's Mind, makes no Alteration as to the Necessity of the Existence of the Events which God knows. Yea.

- 2. This is fo far from weakening the Proof, which has been given of the Impossibility of the not coming to pass of future Events known, as that it establishes that wherein the Strength of the toregoing Arguments consists, and shews the Clearness of the Evidence. For,
- (1.) The very Reason why God's Knowledge is without Succession, is, because it is absolutely perfect, to the highest possible Degree of Clearness and Certainty: all Things, whether past, present or to come, being view'd with equal Evidence and Fulness; future Things being seen with as much Clearness, as if they were present; the View is always in absolute Perfection; and absolute constant Perfection admits of no Alteration, and so no Succession; the actual Existence of the Thing known, don't at all increase, or add to the Clearness or Certainty of the Thing known: God calls the Things that are not, as tho' they were; they are all one to Him as if they had already existed. But herein consists the Strength of the Demonstration before given, of the Impossibility of the not existing of those Things whose Existence God knows; That it is as impossible they should fail of Existence, as if they existed already. This Objection, instead of weakening this Argument, sets it in the clearest and strongest Light; for it supposes it to be so indeed, that the Existence of suture Events is in God's View so much as if it already had been, that when they come actually to exist, it makes not the least Alteration or Variation in his View or Knowledge of them.

(2) The Objection is founded on the Immutability of God's Knowledge: For 'tis the Immutability of Knowledge makes his Knowledge to be without Succession. But this most directly and plainly demonstrates the Thing I insist on, viz. that 'tis utterly impossible the known Events should fail of Existence. For if that were possible, then it would be possible for there to be a Change in God's Knowledge and View of Things. For if the known Event should fail of Existence, and not come into Being, as God expected, then God would fee it, and so would change his Mind, and fee his former Mistake; and thus there would be Change and Succession in his Knowledge. But as God is immutable, and fo it is utterly infinitely impossible that his Vi-w should be changed; fo 'tis, for the fame Reason, just so impossible that the fore-known Event should not exist: And that is to be impossible in the highest Degree: and therefore the contrary is necessary. Nothing is more impossible than that the immutable God should be changed, by the Succession of Time; who comprehends all Things, from Eternity to N_3 Liter182 Foreknowledge proves Necessity. Part II. Eternity, in one, most perfect, and unalterable View; so that his whole eternal Duration is Vitæ interminabilis, tota, simul, & perfecta Possessio.

On the whole, I need not fear to fay, that there is no Geometrical Theorem or Proposition what-foever, more capable of strict Demonstration, than that God's certain Prescience of the Volitions of moral Agents is inconsistent with such a Contingence of these Events, as is without all Necessity; and so is inconsistent with the Arminian Notion of Liberty.

Corol. 2. Hence the Doctrine of the Calvinists, concerning the absolute Decrees of God, does not at all infer any more Fatality in Things, than will demonstrably follow from the Doctrine of most Arminism Divines, who acknowledge God's Omniscience, and universal Prescience. Therefore all Objections they make against the Doctrine of the Calvinists, as implying Hobbes's Doctrine of Necessity, or the Stoical Doctrine of Fate, lie no more against the Doctrine of Calvinists, than their own Doctrine: And therefore it don't become those Divines, to raise such an Out-cry against the Calvinists, on this Account.

Corol. 3. Hence all arguing from Necessity, against the Doctrine of the Inability of unregenerate Men to perform the Conditions of Salvation, and the Commands of God requiring spiritual Duties, and against the Calvinistic Doctrine of efficacious Grace; I say, all Arguings of Arminians (such of 'em as own God's Omniscience) against these Things, on this Ground, that these Doctrines, though they don't suppose Men to be under any Constraint or Coaction, yet suppose 'em under Necessity, with Respect to their moral Actions,

Sect. XIII. Arminian Liberty inconfiftent. 182 tions, and those Things which are requir'd of 'em in Order to their Acceptance with God; and their arguing against the Necessity of Men's Volitions, taken from the Reasonableness of God's Commands, Promifes, and Threatnings, and the Sincerity of his Counfels and Invitations; and all Objections against any Doctrines of the Calvinists as being inconfiftent with human Liberty, because they infer Necessity; I say, all these Arguments and Objections must fall to the Ground, and be justly esteem'd vain and frivolous, as coraing from them; being maintain'd in an Inconsistence with themselves, and in like Manner levelled against their own Doctrine, as against the Doctrine of the Calvinists.

SECTION XIII.

Whether we suppose the Volitions of moral Agents to be connected with any Thing antecedent, or not, yet they must be necessary in such a Sense as to overthrow Arminian Liberty.

VERY Act of the Will has a Cause, or it has not. If it has a Cause, then, according to what has already been demonstrated, it is not contingent, but necessary; the Effect being necessarily dependent and consequent on it's Cause; and that, let the Cause be what it will. If the Cause is the Will itself, by antecedent Acts chusing and determining; still the determined and caused Act must be a necessary Esfect. The Act that is the determined Effect of the foregoing Act which is it's Cause, can't prevent the Essiciency of it's Cause; but must be wholly subject to it's Determination and Command, as much as N 4 the Motions of the Hands and Feet. The confequent commanded Acts of the Will are as paffive and as necessary, with Respect to the antecedent determining Acts, as the Parts of the Body are to the Volitions which determine and command them. And therefore, if all the free Acts of the Will are thus, if they are all determined Effects, determined by the Will it felf, that is, determined by antecedent Choice, then they are all necessary; they are all subject to, and decisively fixed by the foregoing Act, which is their Cause: Yea, even the determining Act it felf; for that must be determined and fixed by another Act, preceding that, if it be a free and voluntary Act; and fo must be necessary. So that by this all the free Acts of the Will are necessary, and can't be free unless they are necessary: Because they can't be free, according to the Arminian Notion of Free. dom, unless they are determined by the Will; which is to be determined by antecedent Choice; which being their Caufe, proves 'em necessary. And yet they fay, Necessity is utterly inconfistent with Liberty. So that, by their Scheme, the Acts of the Will can't be free unless they are necessary, and yet cannot be free if they be not necessary!

But if the other Part of the Dilemma be taken, and it be affirm'd that the free Acts of the Will have no Cause, and are connected with nothing whatsoever that goes before them and determines them, in order to maintain their proper and absolute Contingence, and this should be allowed to be possible; still it will not serve their Turn. For if the Volition come to pass by persect Contingence, and without any Cause at all, then it is certain, no Act of the Will, no prior Act of the Soul was the Cause, no Determination or Choice of the Soul, had any Hand in it. The Will, or the Sect. XIII. inconfift. with Armin. Liberty. 185 the Soul, was indeed the Subject of what happened to it accidentally, but was not the Cause. The Will is not active in causing or determining, but purely the passive Subject; at least according to their Notion of Action and Passion. In this Cafe, Contingence does as much prevent the Determination of the Will, as a proper Cause; and as to the Will, it was necessary, and could be no otherwife. For to suppose that it could have been otherwife, if the Will or Soul had pleased, is to suppose that the Act is dependent on some prior Act of Choice or Pleafure; contrary to what now is supposed: It is to suppose that it might have been otherwise, if it's Cause had made it or ordered it otherwife. But this don't agree to it's having no Cause or Orderer at all. That must be necessary as to the Soul, which is dependent on no free Act of the Soul: But that which is without a Cause, is dependent on no free Act of the Soul: because, by the Supposition, it is dependent on Nothing, and is connected with Nothing. In such a Case, the Soul is necessarily subjected to what Accident brings to pass, from Time to Time, as much as the Earth, that is inactive, is necessarily subjected to what falls upon it. But this don't confift with the Arminian Notion of Liberty, which is the Will's Power of determining it felf in it's own Acts, and being wholly active in it, without Passiveness, and without being subject to Necessity. ---- Thus, Contingence belongs to the Arminian Notion of Liberty, and yet is inconfiftent with it.

I would here observe, that the Author of the Essay on the Freedom of Will, in God and the Creature, Page 76, 77. says as follows, "The Word Chance always means something done without Design. Chance and Design stand in direct "Oppo-

" Opposition to each other: and Chance can ne-" ver be properly applied to the Acts of the Will, " which is the Spring of all Defign, and which " designs to chuse whatsoever it doth chuse, whe-" ther there be any superiour Fitness in the Thing "which it chuses, or no; and it designs to de-" termine it felf to one Thing, where two Things " perfectly equal are proposed, meerly because it "will." But herein appears a very great Inadvertence in this Author. For if the Will be the Spring of all Design, as he says, then certainly it is not always the Effect of Design; and the Acts of the Will themselves must fometimes come to pass when they don't fpring from Design; and consequently come to pass by Chance, according to his own Definition of Chance. And if the Will defigns to chuse whatsoever it does chuse, and designs to determine it felf, as he says, then it designs to de-termine all its Designs. Which carries us back from one Defign to a foregoing Defign determining that, and to another determining that; and fo on in infinitum. The very first Design must be the Effect of foregoing Design, or else it must be by Chance, in his Notion of it.

Here another Alternative may be proposed, relating to the Connection of the Acts of the Will with something foregoing that is their Cause, not much unlike to the other; which is this: Either human Liberty is such that it may well stand with Volitions being necessarily connected with the Views of the Understanding, and so is consistent with Necessity; or it is inconsistent with, and contrary to such a Connection and Necessity. The former is directly subversive of the Arminian Notion of Liberty, consisting in Freedom from all Necessity. And if the latter be chosen, and it be said, that Liberty is inconsistent with any such necessary

Sect. XIII. inconfift. with Armin. Liberty. 187 neceffary Connection of Volition with foregoing Views of the Understanding, it confisting in Freedom from any fuch Necessity of the Will as that would imply; then the Liberty of the Soul confifts (in Part at least) in the Freedom from Restraint, Limitation and Government, in it's actings, by the Understanding, and in Liberty and Liableness to act contrary to the Understanding's Views and Dictates: and confequently the more the Soul has of this Disengagedness, in it's acting, the more Liberty. Now let it be confidered what this brings the noble Principle of human Liberty to, particularly, when it is possessed and enjoyed in it's Perfecion, viz a full and perfect Freedom and Liableness to act altogether at Random, without the least Connection with, or Restraint or Government by, any Dictate of Reason, or any Thing whatsoever apprehended, considered or viewed by the Under-Itanding; as being inconfistent with the full and perfect Sovereignty of the Will over it's own Determinations .--- The Notion Mankind have conceived of Liberty, is fome Dignity or Privilege, fomething worth claiming. But what Dignity or Privilege is there, in being given up to fuch a wild Contingence as this, to be perfectly and constantly liable to act unintelligently and unreasonably, and as much without the Guidance of Understanding, as if we had none, or were as destitute of Perception as the Smoke that is driven by the Wind!

PART III.

Wherein is enquired, whether any such Liberty of Will as Arminians hold, be necessary to Moral Agency, Vertue and Vice, Praise, and Dispraise, &c.

SECTION I.

GOD's moral Excellency necessary, yet vertuous and praise-worthy.

AVING confidered the first Thing that was proposed to be enquired into, relating to that Freedom of Will which Arminians maintain; namely, Whether any such Thing does, ever did, or ever can exist, or be conceived of; I come now to the fecond Thing proposed to be the Subject of Enquiry, viz. Whether any such Kind of Liberty be requisite to moral Agency, Vertue and Vice, Praise and Blame, Reward and Punishment, &c.

Sect. I. God's moral Excellency, &c. 189

I shall begin with some Consideration of the Vertue and Agency of the Supream moral Agent, and Fountain of all Agency and Vertue.

Dr. Whithy, in his Discourse on the five Points, P. 14. fays, "If all human Actions are necessary, Wirtue and Vice must be empty Names; we " being capable of Nothing that is blame-wor-" thy, or deferveth Praife; For who can blame " a Person for doing only what he could not help, " or judge that he deferveth Praise only for what " he could not avoid?" To the like Purpose he fpeaks in Places innumerable; especially in his Discourse on the Freedom of the Will; constantly maintaining, that a Freedom not only from Coastion, but Necessity, is absolutely requisite, in order to Actions being either worthy of Blame, or deferving of Praise. And to this agrees, as is well known, the current Doctrine of Arminian Writers, who in general hold, that there is no Vertue or Vice, Reward or Punishment, nothing to be commended or blamed, without this Freedom. And yet Dr. Whithy, P. 300, allows, that God is without this Freedom; And Arminians, fo far as I have had Opportunity to observe, generally acknowledge, that God is necessarily holy, and his Will necessarily determined to that which is good.

So that, putting these Things together, the infinitely holy God, who always used to be esteemed by God's People, not only vertuous, but a Being in whom is all possible Vertue, and every Vertue in the most absolute Purity and Perfection, and in infinitely greater Brightness and Amiableness than in any Creature; the most perfect Pattern of Vertue, and the Fountain from whom all others Vertue is but as Beams from the Sun; and who has been supposed to be, on the Account of his Ver-

190 God's moral Excellency necessary, Part III. tue and Holiness, infinitely more worthy to be esteemed, loved, honoured, admired, commended, extoll'd and praifed, than any Creature; and He who is thus every where represented in Scripture; I fay, this Being, according to this Notion of Dr. Whithy, and other Arminians, has no Vertue at all: Vertue, when afcribed to Him, is but an empty Name; and he is deferving of no Commendation or Praise; because he is under Necessity, He can't avoid being holy and good as he is; therefore no Thanks to him for it. It feems, the Holiness, Justice, Faithfulness, &c. of the most High, must not be accounted to be of the Nature of that which is vertuous and praise-worthy. They will not deny, that these Things in God are good; But then we must understand them, that they are no more vertuous, or of the Nature of any Thing commendable, than the Good that is in any other Being that is not a moral Agent; as the Brightness of the Sun, and the Fertility of the Earth are good, but not vertuous, because these Properties are necessary to these Bodies, and not the Fruit of Self-determining Power.

There needs no other Confutation of this Notion of God's not being vertuous or praife-worthy, to Christians acquainted with the Bible, but only stating and particularly representing of it. To bring Texts of Scripture, wherein God is represented as in every Respect, in the highest Manner vertuous, and supreamly Praise-worthy, would be endless, and is altogether needless to such as have been brought up under the Light of the Gospel.

It were to be wished, that Dr. Whithy, and other Divines of the same Sort, had explain'd themfelves, when they have afferted, that That which

Sect. I. yet Vertuous and Praise-worthy. 191 is necessary, is not deserving of Praise; at the fame Time that they have own'd God's Ferfection to be necessary, and so in Effect representing God as not deserving Praise. Certainly, if their Words have any Meaning at all, by Praise, they must mean the Exercise or Testimony of some Sort of Esteem, Respect, or honourable Regard. And will they then say, that Men are worthy of that Esteem, Respect, and Honour for their Vertue, small and imperfect as it is, which yet God is not worthy of, for his infinite Righteousness, Holiness, and Goodness? If so, it must be because of some Sort of peculiar Excellency in the vertuous Man, which is his Prerogative, wherein he really has the Preference; fome Dignity, that is entirely diffinguish'd from any Excellency, Amiableness or Honourableness in God; not in Impersection and Dependance, but in Pre-eminence; which therefore he don't receive from God, nor is God the Fountain or Pattern of it; nor can God, in that Respect, stand in Competition with him, as the Object of Honour and Regard; but Man may claim a peculiar Esteem, Commendation and Glory, that God can have no Pretension to. Yea, God has no Right, by vertue of his necessary Holiness, to intermeddle with that grateful Respect and Praise, due to the vertuous Man, who chuses Vertue, in the Exercise of a Freedom ad utrumque; any more than a precious Stone, which can't avoid being hard and beautiful.

And if it be so, let it be explained what that peculiar Respect is, that is due to the vertuous Man, which differs in Nature and Kind, in some Way of Preeminence, from all that is due to God What is the Name or Description of that peculia. Affection? Is it Esteem, Love, Admiration, Honour, Praise.

192 Concerning GOD's Vertue. Part III.

Praife, or Gratitude? The Scripture every where represents God as the highest Object of all these: there we read of the Soul's magnifying the Lord, of loving Him with all the Heart, with all the Soul, with all the Mind, and with all the Strength; admiring him, and his righteous Acts, or greatly regarding them, as marvellous and wonderful; bonouring, glorifying, exalting, extolling, bleffing, thanking, and praising Him; giving unto Him all the Glory of the Good which is done or received, rather than unto Men; that no Flesh should glory in bis Presence; but that He should be regarded as the Being to whom all Glory is due. What then is that Respect? What Passion, Affection, or Exercise is it, that Arminians call Praise, diverse from all these Things, which Men are worthy of for their Vertue, and which God is not worthy of, in any Degree?

If that Necessity which attends God's moral Perfections and Actions, be as inconfiftent with a Being worthy of Praise, as a Necessity of Coaction; as is plainly implied in or inferred from Dr. Whithy's Difcourse; then why should we thank God for his Goodness, any more than if He were forced to be good, or any more than we should thank one of our Fellow-Creatures who did us good, not freely, and of good Will, or from any Kindness of Heart, but from meer Compulfion, or extrinfical Necessity? Arminians suppose, that God is necessarily a good and gracious Being: for this they make the Ground of some of their main Arguments against many Doctrines maintained by Calvinists; They fay, these are certainly false, and it is impossible they should be true, because they are not confishent with the Goodness of God. This supposes, that it is impossible but that God fhould be good: for if it be possible that

He

Sect. I. yet Vertuous & Praise-worthy. 19; He should be otherwise, then that Impossibility of the Truth of these Doctrines ceases, according to their own Argument.

That Vertue in God is not, in the most proper Sense, rewardable, is not for Want of Merit in his moral Perfections and Actions, fufficient to deferve Rewards from his Creatures; but because He is infinitely above all Capacity of receiving any Reward or Benefit from the Creature: He is already infinitely and unchangeably happy, and we can't be profitable unto Him. But still he is worthy of our fupream Benevolence for his Vertue; and would be worthy of our Beneficence, which is the Fruit and Expression of Benevolence, if our Goodness could extend to Him. If God deferves to be thanked and praifed for his Goodness, He would for the same Reason, deserve that we should also requite his Kindness, if that were possible. What shall I render to the Lord for all his Benefits? is the natural Language of Thankfulness: and so far as in us lies, it is our Duty to recompenie God's Goodness, and render again according to Benefits received. And that we might have Opportunity for fo natural an Expression of our Gratitude to God, as Beneficence, notwithstanding his being infinitely above our Reach; He has appointed others to be his Receivers, and to stand in his Stead, as the Objects of our Beneficence; fuch are especially our indigent Brethren.

SECTION II.

The AEIs of the Will of the human Soul of Jesus Christ necessarily holy, yet truly vertuous, praise-worthy, rewardable, &c.

Have already confidered how Dr. Whithy infifts upon it, that a Freedom, not only from Coaction, but Necessity, is requisite either to Vertue or Vice, Praise or Dispraise, Reward or Punishment. He also infifts on the same Freedom as absolutely requisite to a Person's being the Subject of a Law, of Precepts or Probibitions; in the Book before mentioned (P. 301, 314, 328, 339, 340, 341, 342, 347, 361, 373, 410.) And of Promises and Threatnings; (P. 298, 301, 305, 311, 339, 340, 363.) And as requisite to a State of Trial. (P. 297, &c.)

Now therefore, with an Eye to these Things, I would enquire into the moral Conduct and Practice of our Lord Jesus Christ, which he exhibited in his human Nature here, in his State of Humiliation. And First, I would shew, that his holy Behaviour was necessary; or that it was impossible it should be otherwise, than that He should behave himself holily, and that he should be perfectly holy in each individual Act of his Life. And Secondly, that his holy Behaviour was properly of the Nature of Vertue, and was worthy of Praise; and that He was the Subject of Law, Precepts or Commands, Promises and Rewards; and that he was in a State of Trial.

I. It was impessible, that the Acts of the Will of the human Soul of Christ should, in any Instance, stance, Degree or Circumstance, be otherwise than holy, and agreable to God's Nature and Will. The following Things make this evident.

1. God had promifed fo effectually to preferve and uphold Him by his Spirit, under all his Temptations, that he should not fail of reaching the End for which He came into the World; --which he would have fail'd of, had he fallen into Sin. We have fuch a Promife, Ifa. xliii. 1, 2, 3, 4. Behold my Servant, whom I uphold; mine Elect, in whom my Soul delighteth: I have put my Spirit upon him: He shall bring forth Judgment to the Gentiles: He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his Voice to be heard in the Street .--- He shall bring forth Judgment unto Truth. He shall not fail, nor be discouraged, till he have set Judgment in the Earth; and the Isles shall wait for his Law. This Promise of Christ's having God's Spirit put upon Him, and his not crying and lifting up his Voice, &c. relates to the Time of Christ's Appearance on Earth; as is manifest from the Nature of the Promise, and also the Application of it in the New Testament, Matth. xii. 18. And the Words imply a Promise of his being so upheld by God's Spirit, that he should be preserved from Sin; particularly from Pride and Vain-glory, and from being overcome by any of the Temptations he should be under to affect the Glory of this World; the Pomp of an earthly Prince, or the Applause and Praise of Men: and that he should be so upheld, that he should by no Means fail of obtaining the End of his coming into the World, of bringing forth Judgment unto Victory, and establishing his Kingdom of Grace in the Earth.----And in the following Verses, this Promise is confirmed, with the greatest imaginable Solemnity. Thus faith the LORD, HE that created the Heavens, O_{-2} and stretched them out; He that spread forth the Earth, and that which cometh out of it; He that giveth Breath unto the People upon it, and Spirit to them that walk therein: I the Lord have called Thee in Rightcousness, and will hold thine Hand; and will keep Thee, and give Thee for a Covenant of the People, for a Light of the Gentiles, to open the blind Eyes, to bring out the Prisoners from the Prison, and them that sit in Darkness out of the Prison-House. I am FEHOVAH, that is my Name, &c.

Very parallel with these Promises is that, Isa. xlix. 7, 8, 9. which also has an apparent Respect to the Time of Christ's Humiliation on Earth. Thus saith the Lord, the Redeemer of Israel, and his holy One, to Him whom Man despiseth, to Him whom the Nation abborreth, to a Servant of the Rulers; Kings shall see and arise, Princes also shall worship; because of the Lord that is faithful, and the holy One of Israel, and he shall choose Thee. Thus saith the Lord, In an acceptable Time have I heard Thee; in a Day of Salvation have I helped Thee; and I will preserve Thee, and give thee for a Covenant of the People, to establish the Earth, &c.

And in Ifai. 1. 5----9. we have the Messiah expressing his Assurance, that God would help Him, by so opening his Ear, or inclining his Heart to God's Commandments that He should not be rebellious, but should persevere, and not apostatise, or turn his Back: That through God's Help, He should be immovable, in a Way of Obedience, under the great Trials of Reproach and Suffering he should meet with; setting his Face like a Fint: So that He knew He should not be assured, or frustrated in his Design; and sinally should be approved and justified, as having done his Work saithfully. The Lord bath opened mine Ear; fo that I was not rebellious, neither turned away my Back: I gave my Back to the Smiters, and my Cheeks to them that plucked off the Hair; I bid not my Face from Shame and Spitting. For the Lord God will belp mc; therefore shall I not be confounded: therefore have I set my Face as a Flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed. He is near that justifieth me: who will contend with me? Let us stand together. Who is mine Adversary? Let him come near to me. Behold the Lord God will belp me: who is He that shall condemn me? Lo, they shall all wax old as a Garment, the Moth shall eat them up.

2. The same Thing is evident from all the Promifes which God made to the Messiah, of his future Glory, Kingdom and Success, in his Office and Character of a Mediator: which Glory could not have been obtained, if his Holiness had fail'd, and he had been guilty of Sin. God's absolute Promise of any Things makes the Things promised necessary, and their failing to take Place abfolutely impossible: and in like Manner it makes those Things necessary, on which the Thing promised depends, and without which it can't take Effect. Therefore it appears, that it was utterly impossible that Christ's Holiness should fail, from fuch absolute Promises as those, Psal. cx. 4. The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a Priest forever, after the Order of Melchizedek. And from every other Promise in that Pfalm, contained in each Verse of it. And Psel. ii. 6, 7. I will declare the Decree: The Lord bath faid unto me, Thou art my Son, this Day have I begotten Thee: Ask of Me, and I will give Thee the Heathen for thine Inheritance, &c. Pfal. xlv. 3, 4, &c. Gird thy Sword on thy Thigh, O most Mighty, with thy Glary and thy Majesty; and in thy Majesty ride prosperously. And so every Thing that is said from thence to 198 The Acts of the Will of Christ, Part III. the End of the Psalm. And those Promises, Isa. iii. 13, 14, 15. & liii. 10, 11, 12. And all those Promises which God makes to the Messiah, of Success, Dominion and Glory in the Character of a Redeemer, in Isai. Chap. xlix.

3. It was often promifed to the Church of God of old, for their Comfort, that God would give them a righteous, finless Saviour. Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. Behold, the Days come, faith the Lord, that I will raise up unto David a righteous Branch; and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute Judgmeni and Justice in the Earth. In his Days shall Judah be faved, and Israel shall dwell safely. And this is the Name whereby He shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness. So, Jer. xxxiii. 15 .--- I will cause the Eranch of Righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute Judgment and Righteousness in the Land. Isai. xi. 6, 7. For unto us a Child is born; --- Upon the I brone of David and of his Kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with Judgment and Justice, from henceforth, even for ever: The Zeal of the Lord of Hosts will do this. Chap. xi. at the Beginning. There shall come forth a Rod out of the Stem of Jeffe, and a Branch shall grow out of his Roots; and the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon Him, --- The Stirit of Knowledge, and of the Fear of the Lord: ---- With Righteousness shall He judge the Poor, and reprove with Equity: ---- Righteousness shall be the Girdle of his Loins, and Fathfulness the Girdle of his Reins. Chap. lii. 13. My Servant shall deal prudently. Chap. liii. Q. Because He had done no Violence, neither was Guile found in his Mouth. If it be impossible, that these Promises should fail, and it be easier for Heaven and Earth to pass away, than for one Jot or Tittle of these Promises of God to pass away, then it was impossible that Christ should commit any Sin. Christ himself signified, that it was impossible but that the Things which were spoken conconcerning Him should be fulfilled. Luk. xxiv. 44. --- That all Things must be fulfilled, which were written in the Law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Pfalms concerning Me. Mat. xxvi. 53, 54. But kow then shall the Scripture be fulfilled, that thus it must be? Mark xiv. 49. But the Scriptures must be fulfilled. And so the Apostle, Acts i. 16, 17 .--- This Scripture must needs have been fulfilled.

4. All the Promises which were made to the Church of old, of the Messiah as a future Saviour, from that made to our first Parents in Paradise, to that which was delivered by the Prophet Malachi, shew it to be impossible that Christ should not have persevered in persect Holiness. The antient Pre-dictions given to God's Church, of the Messiah as a Saviour, were of the Nature of Promises; as is evident by the Predictions themselves, and the Manner of delivering them. But they are exprefly, and very often called Promifes in the New-Testament; as in Luke i. 54, 55, 72, 73. Acts xiii. 32, 33. Rom. i. 1, 2, 3. and Chap. xv. 8. Heb. vi. 13, &c. These Promises were often made with great Solemnity, and confirmed with an Oath; as in Gen. xxii. 16, 17. By my felf have I sworn, saith the Lord, that in bleffing, I will blefs thee, and in multiplying, I will multiply thy Seed, as the Stars of Heaven, and as the Sand which is upon the Sea-Shore: --- And in thy Seed shall all the Nations of the Earth be blessed. Compare Luke i. 72, 73. and Gal. iii. 8, 15, 16. The Apostle in Heb. vi. 17, 18. speaking of this Promise to Abraham, says, Wherein God willing more abundantly to shew to the Heirs of Promise the Immutability of his Counsel, confirmed it by an Oath; that by two IMMUTABLE Things, in which it was IMPOSSIBLE for God to lie, he me ht bave strong Consolation .- In which Words, the Necessity of the Accomplishment, or (which is he fame Thing) the Impossibility of the contrary is () 1 fully 200 The Acts of the Will of Christ, Part III. fully declared. So God confirmed the Promife of the great Salvation of the Messiah, made to David, by an Oath; Pfal. lxxxix. 3, 4. I have made a Covenant with my Chosen, I have sworn unto David my Servant; Thy Seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy Throne to all Generations. There is Nothing that is fo abundantly fet forth in Scripture, as fure and irrefragable, as this Promife and Oath to David. See Pfal. lxxxix. 34, 35, 36. 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. Ifai. lv. 3. A&I. ii. 29, 30. and xiii. 34. The Scripture expressly speaks of it as utterly impessible that this Promise and Oath to David, concerning the everlafting Dominion of the Meffiah of his Seed, should fail. Jer. xxxiii. 15, &c. In those Days, and at that Time, I will cause the Branch of Righteousness to grow up unto David .-- For thus faith the Lord, David shall never want a Man to fit upon the Throne of the House of Ifrael .-- ver. 20, 21. If you can break my Covenant of the Day, and my Covenant of the Night, and that there should not be Day and Night in their Season; then may also my Covenant be broken with David my Servant, that He should not have a Son to reign upon his Throne. So in ver. 25, 26,--- Thus abundant is the Scripture in reprefenting how impeffible it was, that the Promifes made of Old concerning the great Salvation and Kingdom of the Messiah fhould fail: Which implies, that it was impossible that this Messiah, the second Adam, the promifed Seed of Abraham, and of David, should fall from his Integrity, as the first Adam did.

5. All the Promises that were made to the Church of God under the Old Testament, of the great Enlargement of the Church, and Advancement of her Glory, in the Days of the Gospel, after the Coming of the Messiah; the Increase of her Light, Liberty, Holiness, Joy, Triumph over her Enemies, &c. of which so great a Part of the Old Testament confists; which are repeated fo often, are fo variously exhibited, fo frequently introduced with great Pomp and Solemnity, and are so abundantly sealed with typical and symbolical Representations; I say, all these Promifes imply, that the Messiah should perfect the Work of Redemption; and this implies, that he should persevere in the Work which the Father had appointed Him, being in all Things conformed to his Will. These Promises were often confirmed by an Oath. (See Isai. liv. 9. with the Context; Chap. lxii. 18.) And it is represented as utterly impossible that these Promises should fail. (I/ai. xlix 15. with the Context, Chap. liv. 10. with the Context; Chap. li. 4-8. Chap. xl. 8. with the Context.) And therefore it was impossible, that the Messiah should fail, or commit Sin.

- 6. It was impossible, that the Messiah should fail of persevering in Integrity and Holiness, as the first Adam did, because this would have been inconfiftent with the Promifes which God made to the bleffed Virgin, his Mother, and to her Hufband; implying, that He should save his People from their Sins, that God would give Him the Throne of his Father David, that He should reign over the House of Jacob forever; and that of his Kingdom there shall be no End. These Promises were sure, and it was impossible they should fail. And therefore the Virgin Mary, in trusting fully to them, acted reasonably, having an immovable Foundation of her Faith; as Elisabeth observes, ver. 45. And blessed is she that believeth; for there shall be a Performance of these Things which were told her from the Lord.
- 7. That it should have been possible that Christ should fin, and so fail in the Work of our Redemption, demption, does not confift with the eternal Purpose and Decree of God, reveal'd in the Scriptures, that He would provide Salvation for fallen Man in and by Jesus Christ, and that Salvation should be offered to Sinners through the Preaching of the Gospel. Such an absolute Decree as this Arminians don't deny. Thus much at least (out of all Controversy) is implied in such Scriptures, as 1 Cor. ii. 7. Eph. i. 4. 5. and Chap. iii. 9, 10, 11. 1 Pet. i. 19, 20. Such an absolute Decree as this, Arminians allow to be fignified in these Texts. And the Arminians Election of Nations and Societies, and general Election of the Christian Church, and conditional Election of particular Persons, imply God could not decree before the Foundation of the World, to fave all that should believe in, and obey Christ, unless he had absolutely decreed that Salvation should be provided, and effectually wrought out by Christ. And fince (as the Arminians themselves strenuously maintain) a Decree of God infers Necessity; hence it became necessary that Christ should persevere, and actually work out Salvation for us, and that he should not fail by the Commission of Sin.

8. That it should have been possible for Christ's Holiness to fail, is not consistent with what God promised to his Son before all Ages. For, that Salvation should be offered to Men thro' Christ, and bestowed on all his faithful Followers, is what is at least implied in that certain and infallible Promise spoken of by the Apostle, Tit. i. 2. In hops of eternal Life; which God, that cannot lie, promised before the World began. This don't seem to be controverted by Arminians *.

9. That

^{*} See Dr. Whithy on the five Points, P. 48, 49, 50.

- 9. That it should be possible for Christ to fail of doing his Father's Will, is inconfiftent with the Promise made to the Father by the Son, by the Logos that was with the Father from the Beginning, before he took the human Nature: as may be feen in Psal. xl. 6, 7, 8, (compar'd with the Apostle's Interpretation, Heb. x. 5---9.) Sacrifice and Offering thou didst not desire: mine Ears hast thou opened, (or bored;) Burnt-Offering and Sin-Offering Thou hast not required. Then said I, Lo, I come: In the Volume of the Book it is written of me. I delight to do thy Will, O my God, and thy Law is within my Heart. Where is a manifest Allusion to the Covenant which the willing Servant, who loved his Master's Service, made with his Master, to be his Servant for ever, on the Day wherein he had his Ear bored; which Covenant was probably inferted in the publick Records, called the Volume of the Book, by the Judges, who were called to take Cognizance of the Transaction; Exod. xxi. If the Logos, who was with the Father, before the World, and who made the World, thus engaged in Covenant to do the Will of the Father in the human Nature, and the Promife, was as it were recorded, that it might be made fure, doubtless it was impossible that it should fail; and so it was impossible that Christ should fail of doing the Will of the Father in the human Nature.
- ro. If it was possible for Christ to have failed of doing the Will of his Father, and so to have failed of effectually working out Redemption for Sinners, then the Salvation of all the Saints, who were saved from the Beginning of the World, to the Death of Christ, was not built on a firm Foundation. The Messiah, and the Redemption which He was to work out by his Obedience unto Death, was the Foundation of the Saivation of all the Posterity of fallen Man, that ever were faved. Therefore, if when the Old-Testament Saints had the Pardon of their Sins, and the Favour of God promifed them, and Salvation beflowed upon them, still it was possible that the Messiah, when he came, might commit Sin, then all this was on a Foundation that was not firm and stable, but liable to fail; fomething which it was possible might never be. God did as it were trust to what his Son had engaged and promised to do in future Time; and depended fo much upon it, that He proceeded actually to fave Men on the Account of it, as tho' it had been already done. But this Trust and Dependance of God, on the Supposition of Christ's being liable to fail of doing his Will, was leaning on a Staff that was weak, and might possibly break. The Saints of old trusted on the Promises of a future Redemption to be wrought out and compleated by the Messiah, and built their Comfort upon it: Abraham saw Christ's Day and rejoyced; and he and the other Patriarchs died in the Faith of the Promife of it. (Heb. xi. 13.) But on this Supposition, their Faith and their Comfort, and their Salvation, was built on a moveable fallible Foundation; Christ was not to them a tried Stone, a fure Foundation: as in Isai. xxviii. 16. David entirely rested on the Covenant of God with him, concerning the future glorious Dominion and Salvation of the Messiah, of his Seed; says, it was all his Salvation, and all bis Desire; and comforts himself that this Covenant was an everlafting Covenant, ordered in all Things and sure, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. But if Christ's Vertue might fail, he was mistaken: his great Comfort was not built fo fure, as he thought it was, being founded entirely on the Determinations of the Free-Will of Christ's human Soul; which was subject to no Necessity, and might be determined mined either one Way or the other. Also the Dependance of those who looked for Redemption in Jerusalem, and waited for the Consolation of Ifrael, (Luke ii. 25. & 38.) and the Confidence of the Disciples of Jesus, who forsook all and followed Him, that they might enjoy the Benefits of his future Kingdom, was built on a fandy Foundation.

11. The Man Christ Jesus, before he had sinished his Course of Obedience, and while in the midst of Temptations and Trials, was abundant in positively predicting his own future Glory in his Kingdom, and the Enlargement of his Church, the Salvation of the Gentiles through Him, &c. and in Promises of Blessings he would bestow on his true Disciples in his future Kingdom; on which Promifes he required the full Dependance of his Disciples. (70h. xiv.) But the Disciples would have no Ground for such Dependance, if Christ had been liable to fail in his Work: And Christ Himself would have been guilty of Prefumption, in fo abounding in peremptory Promifes of great Things, which depended on a meer Contingence; viz. the Determinations of his free Will, confishing in a Freedom ad utrumque, to either Sin or Holiness, standing in Indisference, and incident, in Thousands of future Instances, to go either one Way or the other.

Thus it is evident, that it was impossible that the Acts of the Will of the human Soul of Christ should be otherwise than holy, and conformed to the Will of the Father; or, in other Words, they were necessarily so conformed.

I have been the longer in the Proof of this Matter, it being a Thing denied by some of the greatest greatest Arminians, by Episcopius in particular; and because I look upon it as a Point clearly and absolutely determining the Controversy between Calvinists and Arminians, concerning the Necessity of such a Freedom of Will as is insisted on by the latter, in order to moral Agency, Vertue, Command or Prohibition, Promise or Threatning, Reward or Punishment, Praise or Dispraise, Merit or Demerit. I now therefore proceed, II. To confider whether Christ, in his holy Behaviour on Earth, was not thus a moral Agent, subject to Commands, Promises, &c.

Dr. Whithy very often speaks of what he calls a Freedom ad utrumlibet, without Necessity, as requisite to Law and Commands; and speaks of Necessity as entirely inconsistent with Injunctions and Probibitions. But yet we read of Christ's being the Subject of the Commands of his Father, Joh. x. 18. and xv. 10. And Christ tells us, that every Thing that He faid, or did, was in Compliance with Commandments be had received of the Father; Joh. xii. 49, 50. & xiv. 31. And we often read of Christ's Obedience to his Fathers Commands, Rom. v. 19. Phil. ii. 18. Heb. v. 8.

The foremention'd Writer represents Promises offered as Motives to Persons to do their Duty, or a being moved and induced by Promises, as utterly inconsistent with a State wherein Persons have not a Liberty ad utrumlibet, but are necessarily determined to one. (See particularly, P. 298. & 311.) But the Thing which this Writer asserts, is demonstrably false, if the Christian Religion be true. If there be any Truth in Christianity or the holy Scriptures, the Man Christ Jesus had his Will infallibly, unalterably and unstrustrably determined

Sect. II. Praise-worthy, rewardable, &c. 207 to Good, and that alone; but yet he had Promifes of glorious Rewards made to Him, on Condition of his persevering in, and persecting the Work which God had appointed Him; Isa. liii. 10, 11, 12. Psal. ii. & cx. Isai. xlix. 7, 8, 9.---In Luke xxii. 28, 29. Christ fays to his Disciples, Ye are they which have continued with me in my Temptations; and I appoint unto you a Kingdom, as my Father bath appointed unto me. The Word most properly signifies to appoint by Covenant, or Promise. The plain Meaning of Christ's Words is this: " As you have partook of my Temptations and "Trials, and have been stedfast, and have over-" come; I promise to make you Partakers of my "Reward, and to give you a Kingdom; as the "Father has promifed me a Kingdom for con-"tinuing stedfast, and overcoming in those Trials." And the Words are well explained by those in Rev. iii. 21. To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me in my Throne; even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his Throne. And Christ had not only Promises of glorious Success and Rewards made to his Obedience and Sufferings, but the Scriptures plainly represent Him as using these Promises for Motives and Inducements to obey and fuffer; and particularly that Promise of a Kingdom which the Father had appointed Him, or fitting with the Father on his Throne; as in Heb. xii. 1, 2. Let us lay aside every Weight, and the Sin which doth easily beset us, and let us run with Patience the Race that is fet before us, looking unto Jefus, the Author and Finisher of our Faith; who for the Joy that was set before Him, endured the Cross, despising the Shame, and is set down on the right Hand of the Throne of God.

And how strange would it be to hear any Christian affert, that the holy and excellent Temper and and Behaviour of Jesus Christ, and that Obedience which he performed under such great Trials, was not vertuous or Praise-worthy; because his Will was not free ad utrumque, to either Holiness or Sin, but was unalterably determin'd to one; that upon this Account, there is no Vertue at all, in all Christ's Humility, Meekness, Patience, Charity, Forgiveness of Enemies, Contempt of the World, Heavenly-mindedness, Submission to the Will of God, perfect Obedience to his Commands, (tho' He was obedient unto Death, even the Death of the Cross) his great Compassion to the Afflicted, his unparallel'd Love to Mankind, his Faithfulness to God and Man, under such great Trials; his praying for his Enemies, even when nailing Him to the Cross; That Vertue, when applied to these Things, is but an empty Name; That there was no Merit in any of these Things; that is, that Christ was worthy of Nothing at all on the Account of them, worthy of no Reward, no Praife, no Honour or Respect from God or Man; Because his Will was not indifferent, and free either to these Things, or the Contrary; but under such a strong Inclination or Bias to the Things that were excellent, as made it impossible that he should chuse the contrary; That upon this Account (to use Dr. Whithy's Language) it would be sensibly unreasonable that the human Nature should be rewarded for any of these Things.

According to this Doctrine, That Creature who is evidently set forth in Scripture as the First-born of every Creature, as having in all Things the Pre-eminence, and as the highest of all Creatures in Vertue, Honour, and Worthiness of Esteem, Praise and Glory, on the Account of his Vertue, is less worthy of Reward or Praise, than the very least of Saints; yea, no more worthy than a Clock or meer

Sect. II. Praise-worthy, rewardable, &c. 209 meer Machine, that is purely passive, and moved by natural Necessity.

If we judge by scriptural Representations of Things, we have Reason to suppose, that Christ took on him our Nature, and dwelt with us in this World, in a fuffering State, not only to fatisfy for our Sins; but that He, being in our Nature and Circumstances, and under our Trials, might be our most sit and proper Example, Leader and Captain, in the Exercise of glorious and victorious Vertue, and might be a visible Instance of the glorious End and Reward of it; That we might fee in Him the Beauty, Amiableness, and true Honour and Glory, and exceeding Benefit of that Vertue, which it is proper for us human Beings to practife; and might thereby learn, and be animated, to feek the like Glory and Honour, and to obtain the like glorious Reward. See Heb. ii. 9---14, with v. 8, 9. and xii. 1, 2, 3. Job. xv. 10. Rom. viii. 17. 2 Tim. ii. 11, 12. 1 Pet. ii. 19, 20. and iv. 13. But if there was Nothing of any Vertue or Merit, or Worthine's of any Reward, Glory, Praise or Commendation at all, in all that He did, because it was all necessary, and He could not help it; then how is here any Thing so proper to animate and incite us, free Creatures, by patient Continuance in well-doing, to feek for Honour, Glory, and Vertue?

God speaks of Himself as peculiarly well-pleased with the Righteousness of this Servant of his. Isai. xlii. 21. The Lord is well pleased for his Righteousness sake. The Sacrifices of old are spoken of as a sweet Savour to God, but the Obedience of Christ as far more acceptable than they. Pfal. xl. 6, 7. Sacrifice and Offering Thou didst not desire: --- Aline Eur bas Theu opened [as thy Servant performing forming willing Obedience; Burnt-Offering and Sin-Offering bast thou not required: Then said I, Lo, I come [as a Servant that chearfully answers the Calls of his Master:] I delight to do thy Will, O my God, and thy Law is within mine Heart. Matt. xvii. 5. This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased. And Christ tells us expressly, that the Father loves Him for that wonderful Instance of his Obedience, his voluntarily yielding himself to Death, in Compliance with the Father's Command, Joh. x. 17, 18. Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my Life: ---- No Man taketh it from me; but I lay it down of myself--- This Commandment received I of my Father.

And if there was no Merit in Christ's Obedience unto Death, if it was not worthy of Praise, and of the most glorious Rewards, the heavenly Hosts were exceedingly mistaken, by the Account that is given of them, in Rev. v. 8,---12. --- The four Beasts and the four and twenty Elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them Harps, and golden Vials full of Odours; --- And they sung a new Song, Saying, Thou art WORTHY to take the Book, and to open the Seals thereof; for Thou wast slain, ---- And I beheld, and I heard the Voice of many Angels round about the Throne, and the Beafts, and the Elders, and the Number of them was ten Thousand Times ten Thousand, and Theusands of Thousands, saying with a loud Voice, IVORTHY is the Lamb that was flain, to receive Power, and Riches, and Wisdom, and Strength, and Honour, and Glory, and Bleffing.

Christ speaks of the eternal Life which He was to receive, as the Reward of his Obedience to the Father's Commandments. Joh. xii. 49, 50. I have not spoken of my self; but the Father which sent me, He gave me a Commandment what I should say,

Sect. II. Praise-worthy, rewardable, &c. 211 and what I should speak: And I know that his Commandment is Life everlasting: Whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak. ---- God promifes to divide him a Portion with the great, &c. for his being his righteous Servant, for his glorious Vertue under fuch great Trials and Afflictions, Ifai. liii. 11, 12. He shall fee of the Travel of his Soul and be fatisfied: By his Knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many; for he shall bear their Iniquities. Therefore will I divide him a Portion with the Great, and he shall divide the Spoil with the Strong, because he hath poured out his Soul unto Death. --- The Scriptures represent God as rewarding Him far above all his other Servants, Phil. ii. 7, 8, 9. He took on Him the Form of a Scrvant, and was made in the Likeness of Men: and being found in Fashion as a Man, He bumbled bimself, and became obedient unto Death, even the Death of the Crofs: Wherefore GOD also bath highly exalted Him, and given Him a Name above every Name. ---- Pfal. xlv. 7. Thou lovest Righteousness, and batest Wickedness; therefore God, thy God, bath anointed Thee

There is no Room to pretend, that the glorious Benefits bestowed in Consequence of Christ's Obedience, are not properly of the Nature of a Reward. What is a Reward, in the most proper Sense, but a Benefit bestowed in Consequence of something morally excellent in Quality or Behaviour, in Testimony of Well-pleasedness in that moral Excellency, and Respect and Vivour on that Account? If we consider the Neure of a Reward most strictly, and make the utmost of it, and add to the Things contained in this Description, proper Merit or Worthiness, and the Bestowment of the Benefit in Consequence of a Promise; still it will be found, there is Nothing belonging longing to it, but that the Scripture is most express as to it's belonging to the Glory bestowed on Christ, after his Sufferings; as appears from what has been already observed: There was a glorious Benefit bestowed in Consequence of something morally excellent, being called Righteousness and Obedience; There was great Favour, Love and Well-pleasedness, for this Righteousness and Obedience, in the Bestower; There was proper Merit, or Worthiness of the Benefit, in the Obedience; It was bestowed in Fulfilment of Promises, made to that Obedience; and was bestowed therefore, or because he had performed that Obedience.

I may add to all these Things, that Jesus Christ, while here in the Flesh, was manifestly in a State of Trial. The last Adam, as Christ is called, 1 Cor. xv. 45. Rom. v. 14. taking on Him the human Nature, and fo the Form of a Servant, and being under the Law, to stand and act for us, was put into a State of Trial, as the first Adam was. --- Dr. Whithy mentions thefe three Things as Evidences of Persons being in a State of Trial (on the five Points, P. 298, 299.) namely, Their Afflictions being spoken of as their Trials or Temptations, their being the Subjects of Promises, and their being exposed to Satan's Temptations. But Christ was apparently the Subject of each of these. Concerning Promises made to Him, I have spoken already. The Difficulties and Affictions He met with in the Course of his Obedience, are called his Temptations or Trials, Luke xxii. 28. Te are they which have continued with me in my Temptations, or Trials. Heb. ii. 18. For in that he Himself hath suffered, being tempted [or tried] He is avic to succour them that are tempted. And Chap. iv. 17. We have not an High-Priest, which cannot Sect. III. Of the Inability and Sin, &c. 213 cannot be touched with the Feeling of our Infirmities; but was in all Points tempted like as we are, yet without Sin. And as to his being tempted by Satan, it is what none will dispute.

SECTION III.

The Case of such as are given up of God to Sin, and of fallen Man in general, proves moral Necessity and Inability to be consistent with Blame-worthiness.

R. Whithy afferts Freedom, not only from J Coaction, but Necessity, to be essential to any Thing deferving the Name of Sin, and to an Action's being culpable: in these Words (Discourse on five Points, Edit. 3. P. 348,) "If they be "thus necessitated, then neither their Sins of O-" mission or Commission could deserve that " Name; it being effential to the Nature of Sin, " according to St. Austin's Definition, that it be " an Action, à quo liberum est abstinere. Three "Things feem plainly necessary to make an Ac-tion or Omission culpable; 1. That it be in our "Power to perform or forbear it: For, as Origen, " and all the Fathers fay, no Man is blame-wor-"thy for not doing what He could not do."----And elsewhere the Doctor insists, that "when any " do Evil of Necessity, what they do is no Vice, " that they are guilty of no Fault, * are worthy of no Blame, Dispraise, + or Dishonour, I " but are unblameable." §. If

214 Of the Inability and Sin of fuch Part III.

If these Things are true, in Dr Whithy's Sense of Necessity, they will prove all such to be blamelefs, who are given up of God to Sin, in what they commit after they are thus given up .--- That there is fuch a Thing as Men's being judicially given up to Sin, is certain, if the Scripture rightly informs us; fuch a Thing being often there spoken of: as in Pfal. lxxxi. 12. So I gave them up to their own Hearts Lust, and they walked in their own Counsels. At vi 42 Then God turned, and gave them up a warphip the left of Heaven. Rom. i. 24. Wher jore, God alfo gave them up to Uncleanness, through the Lufts of heer own Hearts, to dishonour their even Bedder herween themselves. Ver. 26. For this Cruse God yave them up to vile Affections. Ver. 28. And was a spey did not like to retain God in their Knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate Mind, to do those Things that are not convenient.

'Tis needless to stand particularly to inquire, what God's giving Men up to their own Heart's Lusts fignifies: It is sufficient to observe, that hereby is certainly meant God's so ordering or difpofing Things, in some Respect or other, either by doing or forbearing to do, as that the Confequence should be Men's continuing in their Sins. So much as Men are given up to, so much is the Consequence of their being given up? whether that be less or more. If God don't order Things so, by Action or Permission, that Sin will be the Confequence, then the Event proves that they are not given up to that Consequence. If Good be the Consequence, instead of Evil, then God's Mercy is to be acknowledged in that Good; which Mercy must be contrary to God's Judgment in giving up to Evil. If the Event must prove that they are given up to Evil as the Confequence, then the Persons who are the Subjects of this Judgment, must be the Subjects of such an Event, and so the Event is necessary.

If not only Coaltion, but all Necessity, will prove Men blameless, then Judas was blameless, after Christ had given him over, and had already declared his certain Damnation, and that he should verily betray Him. He was guilty of no Sin in betraying his Master, on this Supposition; though his so doing is spoken of by Christ as the most aggravated Sin, more heinous than the Sin of Pilate in crucifying Him. And the Jews in Egypt, in Jeremiah's Time, were guilty of no Sin, in their not worshipping the true God, after God had Sworn by his great Name, that his Name should be no more named in the Mouth of any Man of Judah, in all the Land of Egypt. Jer. xliv. 26.

Dr. Whithy (Disc. on five Points, P. 302, 303) denies, that Men, in this World, are ever fo given up by God to Sin, that their Wills should be necessarily determined to Evil; though He owns, that hereby it may become exceeding difficult for Men to do Good, having a strong Bent, and powerful Inclination, to what is Evil .--- But if we should allow the Case to be just as he represents, the Judgment of giving up to Sin will no better agree with his Notions of that Liberty, which is effential to Praife or Blame, than if we should suppose it to render the avoiding of Sin impossible. For if an Impossibility of avoiding Sin wholly excuses a Man; then, for the same Reason, it's being difficult to avoid it, excuses him in Part; and this just in Proportion to the Degree of Difficulty. --- If the Influence of moral Impossibility or Inability be the fame, to excuse Persons in not doing, or not avoiding any Thing, as that of natural Inability, (which is supposed) then undoubt-PA edly edly, in like Manner, moral Difficulty has the same Influence to excuse with natural Difficulty. But all allow, that natural Impossibility wholly excuses, and also that natural Difficulty excuses in Part, and makes the Act or Omission less blameable in Proportion to the Difficulty. All natural Difficulty, according to the plainest Dictates of the Light of Nature, excuses in some Degree, so that the Neglect is not so blameable, as if there had been no Difficulty in the Case: and so the greater the Difficulty is, still the more excuseable, in Proportion to the Increase of the Difficulty. And as natural Impossibility wholly excuses and excludes all Blame, fo the nearer the Difficulty approaches to Impossibility, still the nearer a Person is to Blamelessness in Proportion to that Approach. And if the Case of moral Impossibility or Necessity, be just the fame with natural Necessity or Coaction, as to Influence to excuse a Neglect, then also, for the fame Reason, the Case of natural Disficulty, don't differ in Influence, to excuse a Neglect, from moral Difficulty, arifing from a strong Bias or Bent to Evil, fuch as Dr. Whithy owns in the Case of those that are given up to their own Hearts Lusts. So that the Fault of such Persons must be lessen'd, in Proportion to the Difficulty, and Approach to Impossibility. If ten Degrees of moral Difficulty make the Action quite impossible, and so wholly excuse, then if there be nine Degrees of Difficulty, the Person is in great Part excused, and is nine Degrees in ten, less Blame-worthy, than if there had been no Difficulty at all; and he has but one Degree of Blame-worthinels. The Reason is plain, on Arminian Principles; viz. because as Difficulty, by antecedent Bent and Bias on the Will, is increased, Liberty of Indifference, and Self-determination in the Will, is diminished: fo much Hindrance and Impediment is there, in the the Way of the Will's acting freely, by meer Self-determination. And if ten Degrees of fuch Hindrance take away all fuch Liberty, then nine Degrees take away nine Parts in ten, and leave but one Degree of Liberty. And therefore there is but one Degree of Blameableness, cateris paribus, in the Neglect; the Man being no further blameable in what He does, or Neglects, than he has Liberty in that Affair: For Blame or Praise (fay they) arises wholly from a good Use or Abuse of Liberty.

From all which it follows, that a strong Bent and Bias one Way, and Difficulty of going the contrary, never causes a Person to be at all more exposed to Sin, or any Thing blameable: Because as the Difficulty is increased, so much the less is required and expected. Tho' in one Respect, Exposedness to Sin or Fault is increased, viz. by an Increase of Exposedness to the evil Action or Omission; yet it is diminished in another Respect, to ballance it; namely, as the Sinfulness or Blameableness of the Action or Omission is diminished in the same Proportion. So that, on the whole, the Affair, as to Exposedness to Guilt or Blame, is left just as it was.

To illustrate this, let us suppose a Scale of a Balance to be intelligent, and a free Agent, and indued with a self-moving Power, by Virtue of which it could act and produce Effects to a certain Degree; ex. gr. to move it self up or down with a Force equal to a Weight of ten Pounds; and that it might therefore be required of it, in ordinary Circumstances, to move it self down with that Force; for which it has Power and sull Liberty, and therefore would be blame-worthy if it sail'd of it. But then let us suppose a Weight of ten Pounds to be put in the opposite Scale, which in Force entirely counter-balance it's felf-moving Power, and fo renders it impossible for it to move down at all; and therefore wholly excuses it from any fuch Motion. But if we suppose there to be only nine Pounds in the opposite Scale, this renders it's Motion not impossible, but yet more difficult; fo that it can now only move down with the Force of one Pound: But however, this is all that is required of it under these Circumstances; it is wholly excused from nine Parts of its Motion: And if the Scale, under these Circumstances, neglects to move, and remains at Rest, all that it will be blamed for, will be its Neglect of that one tenth Part of it's Motion; which it had as much Liberty and Advantage for, as in usual Circumstances, it has for the greater Motion, which in fuch a Case would be required. So that this new Difficulty, don't at all increase it's Exposedness to any Thing blame-worthy.

And thus the very Supposition of Difficulty in the Way of a Man's Duty, or Proclivity to Sin, thro' a being given up to Hardness of Heart, or indeed by any other Means whatfoever, is an Inconfistence, according to Dr. Whithy's Notions of Liberty, Vertue and Vice, Blame and Praise. The avoiding Sin and Blame, and the doing what is vertuous and Praise-worthy, must be always equally eafy.

Dr. Whithy's Notions of Liberty, Obligation, Vertue, Sin, &c. led Him into another great Inconfistence. He abundantly insists, that Necesfity is inconfiftent with the Nature of Sin or Fault. He fays in the foremention'd Treatife, P. 14. Who can blame a Person for doing what he could not belo? and P. 15. It being fenfibly unjust, to punish any Man for doing that which it was never in his Power to avoid. And in P. 341 to confirm his Opinion, he quotes one of the Fathers, faying, Why doth God command, if Man hath not Freewill and Power to obey? And again in the same and the next Page, Who will not cry out, that it is Folly to command him, that bath not Liberty to do what is commanded; and that it is unjust to condemn Him. that has it not in his Power to do what is required? And in P. 373. He cites another faying, A Law is given to Him that can turn to both Parts; i.e. obey or transgress it: But no Law can be against Him sobo is bound by Nature.

And yet the same Dr. Whithy afferts, that fallen Man is not able to perform perfect Obedience. In P. 165. He has these Words, "The Nature of " Adam had Power to continue innocent, and "without Sin; whereas it is certain, our Nature " never had fo." But if we han't Power to continue innocent and without Sin, then Sin is confistent with Necessity, and we may be finful in that which we have not Power to avoid; and those Thing can't be true, which He afferts elsewhere, namely, "That if we be necessitated, nei-"ther Sins of Omission nor Commission, would " deserve that Name." (P. 348.) If we have it not in our Power to be innocent, then we have it not in our Power to be blamelefs: and if so we are under a Necessity of being blame-wo-thy. And how does this confift with what he fo often afferts, that Necessity is inconsistent with Blame or Praise? If we have it not in our Power to perform perfect Obedience to all the Commands of God, then we are under a Necessity of breaking fome Commands, in fome Degree; having no Power to perform fo much as is commanded. And if so, why does he cry out of the Unreason220 Of the Inability of failen Man. Part III. ableness and Folly of commanding beyond what Men have Power to do?

And Arminians in general are very inconsistent with themselves in what they say of the Inability of fallen Man in this Respect. They strenuously maintain, that it would be unjust in God, to require any Thing of us beyond our present Power and Ability to perform; and also hold, that we are now unable to perform perfect Obedience, and that Christ died to satisfy for the Impersections of our Obedience, and has made Way that our imperfect Obedience might be accepted instead of perfect: Wherein they feem infensibly to run themfelves into the groffest Inconsistence. For, (as I have observed elsewhere) "They hold that God " in Mercy to Mankind has abolished that rigor--" ous Constitution or Law, that they were under " originally; and instead of it, has introduced a " more mild Constitution, and put us under a " new Law, which requires no more than imper-" fect fincere Obedience, in Compliance with our poor infirm impotent Circumstances fince the "Fall."

Now, how can these Things be made confistent? I would ask what Law these Imperfections of our Obedience are a Breach of? If they are a Breach of no Law that we were ever under, then they are not Sins. And if they be not Sins, what Need of Christ's dying to satisfy for them? But if they are Sins, and the Breach of some Law, what Law is it? They can't be a Breach of their new Law; for that requires no other than imperfect Obedience, or Obedience with Imperfections: And therefore to have Obedience attended with Imperfections, is no Breach of it; for 'tis as much as it requires. And they can't be a Breach Breach of their old Law; for that, they fay, is entirely abolished; and we never were under it.---They say, it would not be just in God to require of us perfect Obedience, because it would not be just to require more than we can perform, or to punish us for failing of it. And therefore, by their own Scheme, the Imperfections of our Obedience don't deserve to be punished. What need therefore of Christ's dying, to satisfy for them? What need of his Suffering, to satisfy for that which is no Fault, and in it's own Nature deferves no Suffering? What need of Christ's dying, to purchase, that our imperfest Obedience should be accepted, when according to their Scheme, it would be unjust in itself, that any other Obedience than imperfest should be required? What need of Christ's dying to make Way for God's accepting such an Obedience, as it would be unjust in Him not to accept? Is there any Need of Christ's dying, to prevail with God not to do unrighteously?---- If it be said, that Christ died to satisfy that old Law for us, that so we might not be under it, but that there might be Room for our being under a more mild Law; still I would inquire, what Need of Christ's dying that we might not be under a Law, which (by their Principles) it would be in itself unjust that we should be under, whether Christ had died or no, because in our present State we are not able to keep it?

So the Arminians are inconfistent with themfelves, not only in what they fay of the Ne d of Christ's Satisfaction to attone for those Imperiections which we cannot avoid, but also in what they say of the Grace of God, granted to enable Men to perform the fincere Obedience of the new 222 Of Inability, and Obligation. Part III. Law. "I grant (fays Dr. Stebbing *) indeed, that " by Reason of original Sin, we are utterly dis-" abled for the Performance of the Condition, " without new Grace from God. But I fay then, " that He gives fuch a Grace to all of us, by " which the Performance of the Condition is "truly possible: And upon this Ground he may, " and doth most righteously require it." If Dr. Stebbing intends to speak properly, by Grace he must mean, that Assistance which is of Grace, or of free Favour and Kindness. But yet in the fame Place he speaks of it as very unreasonable, unjust and cruel, for God to require that, as the Condition of Pardon, that is become impossible by original Sin. If it be fo, what Grace is there in giving Assistance and Ability to perform the Condition of Pardon? Or why is that called by the Name of Grace, that is an absolute Debt, which God is bound to bestow, and which it would be unjust and cruel in Him to with-hold, feeing he requires that, as the Condition of Pardon, which we cannot perform without it?

SECTION IV.

Command, and Obligation to Obedience, confiftent with moral Inability to obey.

T being so much insisted on by Arminian Writers, that Necessity is inconsistent with Law or Command, and particularly, that it is absurd to suppose God by his Command should require that of Men which they are unable to do; not allowing in this Case for any Difference that there is between ^{*} Treatise of the Operations of the Spirit. 2 Edit. P. 112, 113.

Sect. IV. Commands confiftent, &c. between natural and moral Inability; I would therefore now particularly consider this Matter.

And for the greater Clearness, I would distinctly lay down the following things.

I. The Will itself, and not only those Actions which are the Effects of the Will, is the proper Object of Precept or Command. That is, such or such a State or Acts of Men's Wills, is in many Cases, properly required of them by Command; and not only those Alterations in the State of their Bodies or Minds that are the Confequences of Volition. This is most manifest; for 'tis the Soul only, that is properly and directly the Subject of Precepts or Commands; that only being capable of receiving or perceiving Commands. The Motions or State of the Body are Matter of Command, only as they are subject to the Soul, and connected with it's Acts. But now the Soul has no other Faculty whereby it can, in the most direct and proper Sense, consent, yield to, or comply with any Command, but the Faculty of the Will; and 'tis by this Faculty only, that the Soul can directly disobey, or refuse Compliance: For the very Notions of Consenting, Yielding, Accepting, Complying, Refusing, Rejecting, &c. are, according to the Meaning of the Terms, Nothing but certain Acts of the Will. Obedience, in the primary Nature of it, is the fubmitting and yielding of the Will of one to the Will of another. Disobedience is the not confenting, not complying of the Will of the commanded to the manifested Will of the Commander. Other Acts that are not the Acts of the Will, as certain Motions of the Body and Alterations in the Soul, are Obedience or Difobedience only indirectly, as they are connected with the State or Actions of the Will, according according to an established Law of Nature. So that 'tis manifest, the Will itself may be required: And the Being of a good Will is the most proper, direct and immediate Subject of Command; and if this can't be prescribed or required by Command or Precept, nothing can; For other Things can be required no otherwise than as they depend upon, and are the Fruits of a good Will.

Corol. 1. If there be feveral Acts of the Will, or a Series of Acts, one following another, and one the Effect of another, the first and determining Att is properly the Subject of Command, and not only the consequent Acts, which are dependent upon it. Yea, 'tis this more especially which is that which Command or Precept has a proper Respect to; because 'tis this Act that determines the whole Affair: In this Act the Obedience or Disobedience lies, in a peculiar Manner; the confequent Acts being all fubject to it, and governed and determined by it. This determining governing Act must be the proper Subject of Precept, or none.

Corol. 2. It also follows from what has been observed, That if there be any Sort of Act, or Exertion of the Soul, prior to all free Acts of the Will or Acts of Choice in the Case, directing and determining what the Acts of the Will shall be; that Act or Exertion of the Soul can't properly be subject to any Command or Precept, in any Respect whatsoever, either directly or indirectly, immediately or remotely. Such Acts can't be fubject to Commands directly, because they are no Acts of the Will; being by the Supposition prior to all Acts of the Will, determining and giving Rife to all it's Acts: They not being Acts of the Will, there can be in them no Confent to, or Compliance with any Command. Neither can they be subject to Command or Precept indirectly or remotely; for they are not so much as the Effects or Consequences of the Will, being prior to all its Acts. So that if there be any Obedience in that original Act of the Soul, determining all Volitions, it is an Act of Obedience wherein the Will has no Concern at all; it preceding every Act of Will. And therefore, if the Soul either obeys or disobeys in this Act, it is wholly involuntarily; there is no willing Obedience or Rebellion, no Compliance or Opposition of the Will in the Affair: and what Sort of Obedience or Rebellion is this!

And thus the Arminian Notion of the Freedom of the Will confifting in the Soul's determining it's own Acts of Will, instead of being essential to moral Agency, and to Men's being the Subjects of moral Government, is utterly inconfiftent with it. For if the Soul determines all it's Acts of Will, it is therein subject to no Command or moral Government, as has been now observed; because it's original determining Act is no Act of Will or Choice, it being prior, by the Supposition, to every Ass of Will. And the Soul can't be the Subject of Command in the Act of the Will it felf, which depends on the foregoing determining Act, and is determined by it; in as much as this is necessary, being the necessary Confequence and Effect of that prior determining Act, which is not voluntary. Nor can the Man be the Subject of Command or Government in his external Actions; because these are all necesfary, being the necessary Effects of the Acts of the Will themselves. So that Mankind, according to this Scheme, are Subjects of Command or moral moral Government in nothing at all; and all their moral Agency is entirely excluded, and no Room left for Vertue or Vice in the World.

So that 'tis the Arminian Scheme, and not the Sheme of the Calvinifts, that is utterly inconfiftent with moral Government, and with all Use of Laws, Precepts, Prohibitions, Promifes or Threatnings. Neither is there any Way whatfoever to make their Principles confift with these Things. For if it be faid, that there is no prior determining Act of the Soul, preceding the Acts of the Will, but that Volitions are Events that come to pass by pure Accident, without any determining Cause, this is most palpably inconsistent with all Use of Laws and Precepts; for nothing is more plain than that Laws can be of no Use to direct and regulate perfect Accident; which by the Supposition of it's being pure Accident, is in no Case regulated by any Thing preceeding; but happens this Way or that perfectly by Chance, without any Cause or Rule. The perfect Uselessness of Lawsand Precepts also follows from the Arminian Notion of Indifference, as effential to that Liberty which is requifite to Vertue or Vice. For the End of Laws is to bind to one Side; and the End of Commands is to turn the Will one Way: and therefore they are of no Use unless they turn or bias the Will that Way. But if Liberty confifts in Indifference, then their biaffing the Will one Way only, deftroys Liberty; as it puts the Will out of Equilibrium. So that the Will, having a Bias, thro' the Influence of binding Law, laid upon it, is not wholly left to it felf, to determine it felf which Way it will, without Influence from without.

II. Having shewn that the Will it self, especially in those Acts which are original, leading and determining in any Case, is the proper Subject of Precept and Command, and not only those Alterations in the Body, &c. which are the Effects of the Will; I now proceed in the second Place, to observe that the very Opposition or Defect of the Will it felf, in that Act which is it's original and determining AEt in the Case, I say the Will's Opposition in this Ast to a Thing proposed or commanded, or it's failing of Compliance, implies a moral Inability to that Thing: Or in other Words, whenever a Command requires a certain State or Act of the Will, and the Person commanded, notwithstanding the Command and the Circumstances under which it is exhibited, still finds his Will opposite or wanting, in that, belonging to it's State or Acts, which is original and determining in the Affair, that Man is morally unable to obey that Command.

This is manifest from what was observed in the first Part, concerning the Nature of moral Inability, as diffinguished from natural: where it was observed, That a Man may then be said to be morally unable to do a Thing, when He is under the Influence or Prevalence of a contrary Inclination, or has a Want of Inclination, under fuch Circumstances and Views. 'I'is also evident from what has been before proved, that the Will is always, and in every individual Act, necessarily determined by the strongest Motive; and so is always unable to go against the Motive, which all Things confidered, has now the greatest Strength and Advantage to move the Will.-But not further to infift on these Things, the Truth of the Position now laid down, viz. That when the Will is opposite to, or failing of a Compliance with a Q_2 Thing Thing in it's original determining Inclination or AEI, it is not able to comply, appears by the Confideration of these two Things.

- 1. The Will in the Time of that diverse or opposite leading Act or Inclination, and when actually under the Influence of it, is not able to exert it felf to the contrary, to make an Alteration, in order to a Compliance. The Inclination is unable to change it felf; and that for this plain Reason, that it is unable to incline to change it felf. Present Choice can't at present chuse to be otherwise: for that would be at present to chuse fomething diverse from what is at present chosen. If the Will, all Things now confidered, inclines or chuses to go that Way, then it can't chuse, all Things now confidered, to go the other Way, and so can't chuse to be made to go the other Way. To suppose that the Mind is now fincerely inclined to change it felf to a different Inclination, is to suppose the Mind is now truly inclined otherwise than it is now inclined, The Will may oppose some future remote Act that it is exposed to, but not its own present Act
 - 2. As it is impossible that the Will should comply with the Thing commanded with Respect to it's leading Ast, by any Act of it's own, in the Time of that diverse or opposite leading and original Ast, or after it is actually come under the Influence of that determining Choice or Inclination; so 'tis impossible it should be determined to a Compliance by any foregoing Act; for by the very Supposition, there is no foregoing Act; the opposite or non-complying Act being that Act which is original and determining in the Case. Therefore it must be so, that if this first determining Act be found

found non-complying, on the Proposal of the Command, the Mind is morally unable to obey. For to suppose it to be able to obey, is to suppose it to be able to determine and cause it's first determining Ast to be otherwise, and that it has Power better to govern and regulate it's first governing and regulating Ast, which is abfurd; For it is to suppose a prior A& of the Will, determining it's first determining A&; that is, an A& prior to the first, and leading and governing the original and governing Act of all; which is a Contradiction.

Here if it should be faid, that altho' the Mind has not any Ability to will contrary to what it does will, in the original and leading Act of the Will, because there is supposed to be no prior Act to determine and order it otherwise, and the Will can't immediately change it felf, because it can't at prefent incline to a Change; yet the Mind has an Ability for the present to forbear to proceed to Action, and taking Time for Deliberation; which may be an Occasion of the Change of the Inclination.

I answer, (1.) In this Objection that seems to be forgotten which was observed before, viz. that the determining to take the Matter into Confideration, is it felf an Act of the Will: And if this be all the Act wherein the Mind exercises Ability and Freedom, then this, by the Supposition, must be all that can be commanded or required by Precept. And if this Act be the commanded Act, then all that has been observed concerning the commanded Act of the Will remains true, that the very Want of it is a moral Inability to exert it, G_{ℓ} . (2.) We are speaking concent ing the first and leading Act of the Will in the Case, or about the Asfair; And if a Determining Q_3 to deliberate, or on the contrary, to proceed im-mediately without deliberating, be the first and leading Act; or whether it be or no, if there be another Act before it, which determines that; or whatever be the original and leading Act; still the foregoing Proof stands good, that the Non-compliance of the leading Act implies moral Inability to comply.

If it should be objected, that these Things make all moral Inability equal, and suppose Men morally unable to will otherwise than they actually do will, in all Cases, and equally so, in every Inftance.

In answer to this Objection, I defire two Things may be observed. First, That if by being equally unable, be meant as really unable; then so tar as the Inability is meerly moral, 'tis true, the Will, in every Instance, acts by moral Necessity, and is morally unable to act otherwife, as truly and properly in one Case as another; as I humbly conceive, has been perfectly and abundantly demonstrated by what has been said in the preceeding Part of this Essay. But yet, in some Respect, the Inability may be said to be greater in fome Instances than others: Tho' the Man may be truly unable, (if moral Inability can truly be called Inability,) yet he may be further from being able to do fome Things than others. As it is in Things which Men are naturally unable to do. A Person whose Strength is no more than sufficient to lift the Weight of one Hundred Pounds, is as truly and really unable to lift one Hundred and one Pounds, as ten Thousand Founds; but yet he is further from being able to lift the latter Weight than the former; and fo, according to common Use of Speech, has a greater Inability for for it. So it is in moral Inability. A Man is truly morally unable to chuse contrary to a prefent Inclination, which in the least Degree prevails; or contrary to that Motive, which, all Things confidered, has Strength and Advantage now to move the Will, in the least Degree, fuperiour to all other Motives in View: But yet he is further from Ability to relist a very strong Habit, and a violent and deeply rooted Inclination, or a Motive vaftly exceeding all others in Strength. And again, the Inability may in some Respects be called greater, in some Instances than others, as it may be more general and extensive to all Asts of that Kind. So Men may be faid to be unable in a different Sense, and to be further from moral Ability, who have that moral Inability which is general and habitual, than they who have only that Inability which is occasional and particular. * Thus in Cases of natural Inability; he that is born blind may be faid to be unable to fee, in a different Manner, and is in some Respects further from being able to fee, than He whose Sight is hinder'd by a transient Cloud or Mist.

And befides, that which was observed in the first Part of this Discourse concerning the Inability which attends a strong and settled Habit, should be here remember'd; viz. That fix'd Habit is attended with this peculiar moral Inability, by which it is distinguished from occasional Volition, namely, that Endeavours to avoid future Volitions of that Kind, which are agreable to such a Habit, much more frequently and commonly prove vain and insufficient. For tho' it is impossible there should be any true sincere Desires and Endeavours against gainst a present Volition or Choice, yet there may be against Volitions of that Kind, when view'd at a Distance. A Person may desire and use Mean's to prevent future Exercises of a certain Inclination; and in order to it, may wish the Habit might be removed; but his Defires and Endeavours may be ineffectual. The Man may be faid in some Sense to be unable; yea, even as the Word unable is a relative Term, and has Relation to ineffectual Endeavours; yet not with Regard to present, but remote Endeavours.

Secondly, It must be borne in Mind, according to what was observ'd before, that indeed no Inability whatfoever which is meerly moral, is properly called by the Name of Inability; and that in the strictest Propriety of Speech, a Man may be faid to have a Thing in his Power, if he has it at his Election; and He can't be faid to be unable to do a Thing, when He can if He now pleases, or whenever he has a proper, direct and immediate Defire for it. As to those Defires and Endeavours that may be against the Exercises of a ftrong Habit, with Regard to which Men may be faid to be unable to avoid those Exercises, they are remote Desires and Endeavours in two Respects. First, as to Time; they are never against present Volitions, but only against Volitions of fuch a Kind, when view'd at a Distance. Secondly, as to their Nature; these opposite Desires are not directly and properly against the Habit and Inclination it felf, or the Volitions in which it is exercifed; for these, in themselves considered, are agreable; but against fomething else, that attends them, or is their Consequence; the Opposition of the Mind is levelled entirely against this; the Inclination or Volitions themselves are not at all opposed directly, and for their own sake; but only indirectly, indirectly, and remotely on the Account of something aliene and foreign.

III. Tho' the Opposition of the Will it self, or the very want of Will to a Thing commanded, implies a moral Inability to that Thing; yet, if it be as has been already shewn, that the Being of a good State or Act of Will, is a Thing most properly required by Command; then, in some Cases such a State or Act of Will may properly be required, which at present is not, and which may also be wanting after it is commanded. And therefore those Things may properly be commanded, which Men have a moral Inability for.

Such a State or Act of the Will, may be required by Command, as does not already exist. For if that Volition only may be commanded to be which already is, there could be no use of Precept; Commands in all Cases would be perfectly vain and impertinent. And not only may fuch a Will be required as is wanting before the Command is given, but also such as may possibly be wanting afterwards; fuch as the Exhibition of the Command may not be effectual to produce or excite. Otherwife, no fuch Thing as Difobedience to a proper and rightful Command is possible in any Case; and there is no Case supposable or posfible, wherein there can be an inexcufable or faulty Disobedience. Which Arminians cannot affirm, confiftently with their Principles: for this makes Obedience to just and proper Commands always necessary, and Disobedience impossible. And so the Arminian would overthrow Himself, yielding the very Point we are upon, which He fo strenuoully denies, viz. that Law and Command are confiftent with Necessity.

234 Commands and Invitations Part III.

If meerly that Inability will excuse Disobedience, which is implied in the Opposition or Defect of Inclination, remaining after the Command is exhibited, then Wickedness always carries that in it which excuses it. 'Tis evermore so, that by how much the more Wickedness there is in a Man's Heart, by fo much is his Inclination to Evil the ftronger, and by so much the more therefore has he of moral Inability to the Good required. His moral Inability, confisting in the Strength of his evil Inclination, is the very Thing wherein his Wickedness consists; and yet according to Arminian Principles, it must be a Thing inconsistent with Wickedness; and by how much the more he has of it, by so much is he the further from Wickedness.

Therefore, on the whole, it is manifest, that moral Inability alone (which confists in Disinclination) never renders any Thing improperly the subject-matter of Precept or Command, and never can excuse any Person in Disobedience, or Want of Conformity to a Command.

Natural Inability, arifing from the Want of natural Capacity, or external Hindrance (which alone is properly called Inability) without doubt wholly excuses, or makes a Thing improperly the Matter of Command. If Men are excused from doing or acting any good Thing, supposed to be commanded, it must be through some Defect or Obstacle that is not in the Will itself, but intrinsic to it; either in the Capacity of Understanding, or Body, or outward Circumstances.

Here two or three Things may be observed,

- 1. As to spiritual Duties or Acts, or any good Thing in the State or immanent Acts of the Will it felf, or of the Affections (which are only certain Modes of the Exercise of the Will) if Persons are justly excused, it must be thro' want of Capacity in the natural Faculty of Understanding. Thus the same spiritual Duties, or holy Affections and Exercises of Heart, can't be required of Men, as may be of Angels; the Capacity of Understanding being so much inferiour. So Men can't be required to love those amiable Persons whom they have had no Opportunity to fee, or hear of, or come to the Knowledge of, in any Way agreable to the natural State and Capacity of the human Understanding. But the Insufficiency of Motives will not excuse; unless their being insufficient arises not from the moral State of the Will or Inclination it felf, but from the State of the natural Understanding. The great Kindness and Generosity of another may be a Motive infufficient to excite Gratitude in the Person that receives the Kindness, through his vile and ungrateful Temper: in this Case, the Insufficiency of the Motive arises from the State of the Will or Inclination of Heart, and don't at all excuse. But if this Generosity is not fusficient to excite Gratitude, being unknown, there being no Means of Information adequate to the State and Measure of the Person's Faculties, this Infufficiency is attended with a natural Inability, which entirely excuses.
- 2. As to fuch Motions of Body, or Exercises and Alterations of Mind, which don't confift in the immanent Acts or State of the Will it felf, but are supposed to be required as Effects of the Will; I fay, in fuch supposed Effects of the Will, in Cases wherein there is no Want of a Capacity of Understanding; that Inability, and that only excufes.

cuses, which consists in Want of Connection between them and the Will. If the Will fully complies, and the proposed Effect don't prove, according to the Laws of Nature, to be connected with his Volition, the Man is perfectly excused; he has a natural Inability to the Thing required. For the Will itself, as has been observed, is all that can be directly and immediately required by Command; and other Things only indirectly, as connected with the Will. If therefore there be a full Compliance of Will, the Person has done his Duty; and if other Things don't prove to be connected with his Volition, that is not owing to him.

3. Both these Kinds of natural Inability that have been mentioned, and so all Inability that excuses, may be resolved into one Thing; namely, Want of natural Capacity or Strength; either Capacity of Understanding, or external Strength. For when there are external Desects and Obstacles, they would be no Obstacles, were it not for the Impersection and Limitations of Understanding and Strength.

Corol. If Things for which Men have a moral Inability, may properly be the Matter of Precept or Command, then they may also of Invitation and Counsel. Commands, and Invitations come very much to the same Thing; the Difference is only circumstantial: Commands are as much a Manifestation of the Will of him that speaks, as Invitations, and as much Testimonies of Expectation of Compliance. The Difference between them lies in nothing that touches the Affair in Hand. The main Difference between Command and Invitation consists in the Enforcement of the Will of Him who commands or invites. In the latter it is his Kindness, the Goodness which his Will arises from:

Sect. IV. confiftent with moral Inability. 237 in the former it is his Authority. But whatever be the Ground of the Will of him that speaks, or the Enforcement of what he fays, yet feeing neither his Will nor Expectation is any more testified in the one Case than the other; therefore a Person's being directed by Invitation, is no more an Evidence of Infincerity in him that directs, in manifesting either a Will, or Expectation which he has not, than his being known to be morally unable to do what he is directed to by Command. So that all this grand Objection of Arminians against the Inability of fallen Men to exert Faith in Christ, or to perform other spiritual Gospel-Duties, from the Sincerity of God's Counfels and Invitations, must be without Force.

SECTION V.

That Sincerity of Desires and Endeavours, which is supposed to excuse in the Non-performance of Things in themselves good, particularly considered.

IS what is much infifted on by many, that fome Men, tho' they are not able to perform fpiritual Duties, fuch as Repentance of Sin, Love to God, a cordial Acceptance of Christ as exhibited and offer'd in the Gospel, &c. yet they may fincerely desire and endeavour these Things; and therefore must be excused; it being unreasonable to blame'em for the Omission of those Things which they sincerely desire and endeavour to do, but can't do.

Concerning this Matter, the following Things may be observed.

- 1. What is here supposed, is a great Mistake, and gross Absurdity; even that Men may fincerely chuse and desire those spiritual Duties of Love, Acceptance, Choice, Rejection, &c. confifting in the Exercise of the Will it self, or in the Dispofition and Inclination of the Heart; and yet not be able to perform or exert them. This is abfurd, because 'tis absurd to suppose that a Man should directly, properly and fincerely incline to have an Inclination, which at the fame Time is contrary to his Inclination: for that is to suppose him not to be inclined to that which he is inclined to. If a Man, in the State and Acts of his Will and Inclination, does properly and directly fall in with those Duties, he therein performs 'em: For the Duties themselves consist in that very Thing; they confift in the State and Acts of the Will being fo formed and directed. If the Soul properly and fincerely falls in with a certain proposed Act of Will or Choice, the Soul therein makes that Choice it's own. Even as when a moving Body falls in with a proposed Direction of it's Motion, that is the same Thing as to move in that Direction.
- 2. That which is called a Defire and Willingnefs for those inward Duties, in such as don't perform, has respect to these Duties only indirectly and remotely, and is improperly represented as a Willingness for them; not only because (as was observed before) it respects those good Volitions only in a distant View, and with respect to suture Time; but also because evermore, not these Things themselves, but something else, that is aliene and foreign, is the Object that terminates these Volitions and Desires.

A Drunkard, who continues in his Drunkenhelb, being under the Power of a Love, and violent lent Appetite to flrong Drink, and without any Love to Vertue; but being also extreamly covetous and close, and very much exercised and grieved at the Diminution of his Estate, and Prospect of Poverty, may in a Sort defire the Vertue of Temperance: and tho' his present Will is to gratify his extravagant Appetite, yet he may wish he had a Heart to forbear future Acts of Intemperance, and forfake his Excesses, thro' an Unwillinguess to part with his Money: But still he goes on with his Drunkenness; his Wishes and Endeavours are infufficient and ineffectual: Such a Man has no proper, direct, fincere Willingness to forfake this Vice, and the vicious Deeds which belong to it: for He acts voluntarily in continuing to drink to excess: His Defire is very improperly called a Willingness to be temperate; it is no true Defire of that Virtue; for it is not that Vertue that terminates his Wishes; nor have they any direct Respect at all to it. 'Tis only the saving his Money, and avoiding Poverty, that terminates, and exhaufts the whole Strength of his Defire. The Vertue of Temperance is regarded only very indirectly and improperly, even as a necessary Means of gratifying the Vice of Covetoutnets.

So, a Man of an exceeding corrupt and wicked Heart, who has no Love to God and Jesus Christ, but on the contrary, being very profanely and carnally inclined, has the greatest Distaste of the Things of Religion, and Enmity against 'em; yet being of a Family, that from one Generation to another, have most of 'em died in Youth of an hereditary Consumption; and so having little Hope of living long; and having been instructed in the Necessity of a supreme Love to Christ, and Gratitude for his Death and Sufferings, in Order to his Salvation from eternal Mifery; if under these Circumstances he should, thro' Fear of eternal Torments, wish he had such a Disposition: But his profane and carnal Heart remaining, He continues still in his habitual distaste of, and Enmity to God and Religion, and wholly without any Exercise of that Love and Gratitude, (as doubtless the very Devils themselves, notwithstanding all the Devilishness of their Temper, would wish for a holy Heart, if by that Means they could get out of Hell:) In this Cafe, there is no fincere Willingness to love Christ and chuse him as his chief Good: These holy Dispositions and Exercifes are not at all the direct Object of the Will: they truly share no Part of the Inclination or Defire of the Soul; but all is terminated on Deliverance from Torment: and these Graces and pious Volitions, notwithstanding this forced Confent, are looked upon undestrable; as when a fick Man defires a Dofe he greatly abhors, to fave his Life.—From these Things it appears.

- 3. That this indirect Willingness which has been spoken of, is not that Exercise of the Will which the Command requires; but is entirely a different one; being a Volition of a different Nature, and terminated altogether on different Objects; wholly falling short of that Vertue of Will, which the Command has respect to.
- 4. This other Volition, which has only fome indirect Concern with the Duty required, can't excuse for the Want of that good Will it self, which is commanded; being not the Thing which answers and sulfils the Command, and being wholly destitute of the Vertue which the Command seeks.

Further to illustrate this Matter.--- If a Child has a most excellent Father, that has ever treated him with fatherly Kindness and Tenderness, and has every Way in the highest Degree merited his Love and dutiful Regard, being withal very wealthy; but the Son is of fo vile a Disposition, that He inveterately hates his Father; and yet, apprehending that his Hatred of Him is like to prove his Ruin, by bringing Him finally to Poverty and abject Circumstances, thro' his Father's difinheriting Him, or otherwife; which is exceeding cross to his Avarice and Ambition; He therefore wishes it were otherwise: but yet remaining under the invincible Power of his vile and malignant Disposition, He continues still in his settled Hatred of his Father. Now if fuch a Son's indirect Willingness to have Love and Honour towards his Father, at all acquits or excuses before God, for his failing of actually exercising these Dispositions towards Him which God requires, it must be on one of these Accounts. (1.) Either that it answers and fulfils the Command. But this it does not, by the Supposition; because the Thing commanded is Love and Honour to his worthy Parent. If the Command be proper and just, as is supposed, then it obliges to the Thing commanded; and so nothing else but that can an-Swer the Obligation. Or, (2.) It must be at least because there is that Vertue or Goodness in his indirect Willingness, that is equivalent to the Vertue required; and fo balances or countervails it, and makes up for the Want of it. But that also is contrary to the Supposition. The Willingness the Son has merely from a Regard to Money and Honour, has no Goodness in it, to countervail the Want of the pious filial Respect required.

242 What Sincerity of Endeavours, Part III.

Sincerity and Reality, in that indirect Willingness which has been spoken of, don't make it the better. That which is real and hearty is often called fincere; whether it be in Vertue or Vice. Some Persons are sincerely bad; others are sincerely good; and others may be fincere and hearty in Things which are in their own Nature indifferent; as a Man may be fincerely desirous of eating when he is hungry. But a being fincere, hearty and in good Earnest, is no Vertue, unless it be in a Thing that is vertuous. A Man may be sincere and hearty in joining a Crew of Pirates, or a Gang of Robbers. When the Devils cried out, and befought Christ not to torment them, it was no mere Pretence; they were very hearty in their Defires not to be tormented: but this did not make their Will or Desires vertuous. And if Men have fincere Defires, which are in their Kind and Nature no better, it can be no Excuse for the want of any required Vertue.

And as a Man's being fincere in fuch an indirect Desire or Willingness to do his Duty, as has been mention'd, can't excuse for the want of Performance; so it is with Endeavours arising from such a Willingness. The Endeavours can have no more Goodness in 'em, than the Will which they are the Effect and Expression of. And therefore, however fincere and real, and however great a Person's Endeavours are; yea, tho' they should be to the utmost of his Ability; unless the Will which they proceed from be truly good and vertuous, they can be of no Avail, Influence or Weight to any Purpose whatsoever, in a moral Sense or Respect. That which is not truly vertuous in God's Sight, is looked upon by Him as good for Nothing: and so can be of no Value, Weight or Influence in his Account, to recommend.

mend, fatisfy, excuse or make up for any moral Defect. For nothing can counter-balance Evil, but Good. If Evil be in one Scale, and we put a great deal into the other, fincere and earnest Desires, and many and great Endeavours: yet if there be no real Goodness in all, there is no Weight in it; and so it does nothing towards balancing the real Weight which is in the opposite 'Tis only like the fubstracting a Thousand Noughts from before a real Number, which leaves the Sum just as it was.

Indeed fuch Findeavours may have a negatively good Influence. Those Things which have no positive Vertue, have no positive moral Influence; yet they may be an Occasion of Persons avoiding fome positive Evils. As if a Man were in the Water with a Neighbour that he had ill-will to, who could not fwim, holding him by his Hand; which Neighbour was much in Debt to Him; and should be tempted to let him sink and drown; but should resuse to comply with the Temptation; not from Love to his Neighbour, but from the Love of Money, and because by his drowning He should lose his Debt; that which he does in preferving his Neighbour from drowning, is nothing good in the Sight of God: Yet hereby he avoids the greater Guilt that would have been contracted, if he had defignedly let his Neighbour fink and perish. But when Arminians in their Disputes with Calvinists insist to much on sincere Defires and Endeavours, as what must excuse Men. must be accepted of God, &c. 'tis manifest they have Respect to some positive moral Weight or Influence of those Defires and Endeavours. Accepting, justifying, or excusing on the Account of fincere honest Endeavours (as they are called) and Men's doing what they can, &c. has Relation to fome moral Value, fomething that is accepted as Good, and as fuch, countervailing fome Defect.

But there is a great and unknown Deceit, arifing from the Ambiguity of the Phrase, fincere Endeavours. Indeed there is a vast Indistinctness and Unfixedness in most, or at least very many of the Terms used to express Things pertaining to moral and spiritual Matters. Whence arise innumerable Mistakes, strong Prejudices, inextricable Confusion, and endless Controversy.

The Word fincere is most commonly used to fignify fomething that is good: Men are habituated to understand by it the same as bonest and upright; which Terms excite an Idea of fomething good in the strictest and highest Sense; good in the Sight of Him who fees not only the outward Appearance, but the Heart. And therefore Men think that if a Person be fincere, he will certainly be accepted. If it be faid that any one is fincere in his Êndeavours, this fuggefts to Men's Minds as much, as that his Heart and Will is good, that there is no Defect of Duty, as to vertuous Inclination; he honeftly and uprightly defires and endeavours to do as he is required; and this leads 'em to suppose that it would be very hard and unreafonable to punish him, only because he is unfuccessful in his Endeavours, the Thing endeavoured being beyond his Power. --- Whereas it ought to be observed, that the Word fincere has these different Significations.

s. Sincerity, as the Word is fometimes used, fignifies no more than Reality of Will and Endeavour, with respect to any Thing that is professed or pretended; without any Confideration of the Nature

Nature of the Principle or Aim, whence this real Will and true Endeavour arifes. If a Man has fome real Defire to obtain a Thing, either direct or indirect, or does really endeavour after a Thing, he is faid fincerely to defire or endeavour it; without any Confideration of the Goodness or Vertuouiness of the Principle he acts from, or any Excellency or Worthiness of the End he acts for. Thus a Man that is kind to his Neighbour's Wife, who is fick and languishing, and very helpful in her Case, makes a Shew of desiring and endeavouring her Restoration to Health and Vigour; and not only makes fuch a Shew, but there is a Reality in his Pretence, he does heartily and earneftly defire to have her Health reftored, and uses his true and utmost Endeavours for it; He is said fincerely to defire and endeavour it, because he does fo truly or really; tho' perhaps the Principle he afts from, is no other than a vile and icandalous Passion; having lived in Adultery with her, he earnestly defires to have her Health and Vigour restored, that he may return to his criminal Pleafures with her. Or,

2. By Sincerity is meant, not meerly a Reality of Will and Endeavour of some Sort or other, and from fome Confideration or other, but a vertuous Sincerity. That is, that in the Performance of those particular Acts that are the Matter of Vertue or Duty, there be not only the Matter, but the Form and Effence of Virtue, confifting in the Aim that governs the Act, and the Principle exercised in it. There is not only the Reality of the Act, that is as it were the Body of the Duty; but also the Soul, which should properly belong to fuch a Body. In this Senfe, a Man is faid to be fincere, when he acts with a pure Intention; not from finister Views, or bye-Ends: He not only R_{3} in in Reality defires and feeks the Thing to be done, or Qualification to be obtain'd, for fome End or other; But he wills the Thing directly and properly, as neither forced nor bribed; the Vertue of the Thing is properly the Object of the Will.

In the former Sense, a Man is said to be sincere, in Opposition to a meer Pretence, and Shew of the particular Thing to be done or exhibited, without any real Desire or Endeavour at all. In the latter Sense, a Man is said to be sincere, in Opposition to that Shew of Vertue there is in meerly doing the Matter of Duty, without the Reality of the Vertue it self in the Soul, and the Essence of it, which there is a Shew of. A Man may be sincere in the former Sense, and yet in the latter be in the Sight of God, who searches the Heart, a vile Hypocrite.

In the latter Kind of Sincerity, only, is there any Thing truly valuable or acceptable in the Sight of God. And this is the Thing which in Scripture is called Sincerity, Uprightness, Integrity, Truth in the inward Parts, and a being of a perfect Heart. And if there be fuch a Sincerity, and fuch a Degree of it as there ought to be, and there be any Thing further that the Man is not able to perform, or which don't prove to be connected with his fincere Defires and Endeavours, the Man is wholly excused and acquitted in the Sight of God; His Will shall surely be accepted for his Deed: And fuch a fincere Will and Endeavour is all that in Strictness is required of him, by any Command of God. But as to the other Kind of Sincerity of Defires and Endeavours, it having no Vertue in it, (as was observed before) can be of no Avail before God, in any Cafe, to recommend, fatisfy, Sect. V. to graceless Endeavours. 247 fatisfy, or excuse, and has no positive moral Weight or Influence whatsoever.

Corol. 1. Hence it may be infer'd, that Nothing in the Reason and Nature of Things appears, from the Consideration of any moral Weight of that former Kind of Sincerity, which has been spoken of, at all obliging us to believe, or leading us to suppose, that God has made any positive Promises of Salvation, or Grace, or any saving Assistance, or any spiritual Benefit whatsoever, to any Desires, Prayers, Endeavours, Striving, or Obedience of those, who hitherto have no true Vertue or Holiness in their Hearts; though we should suppose all the Sincerity, and the utmost Degree of Endeavour, that is possible to be in a Person without Holiness.

Some object against God's requiring, as the Condition of Salvation, those holy Exercises, which are the Refult of a supernatural Renovation; such as a supream Respect to Christ, Love to God, loving Holiness for it's own sake, &c. that these inward Dispositions and Exercises are above Men's Power, as they are by Nature; and therefore that we may conclude, that when Men are brought to be fincere in their Endeavours, and do as well as they can, they are accepted; and that this must be all that God requires in order to Men's being received as the Objects of his Favour, and must be what God has appointed as the Condition of Salvation. Concerning which I would observe, that in such a Manner of Speaking of Men's being accepted, because they are sincere, and do as well as they can, there is evidently a Supposition of some Vertue, fome Degree of that which is truly Good; tho' it don't go so far as were to be wish'd. For if R 4 Men

Men do what they can, unless their so doing be from some good Principle, Disposition, or Exercife of Heart, some vertuous Inclination or Act of the Will; their fo doing what they can, is in some Respects not a Whit better than if they did Nothing at all. In fuch a Cafe, there is no more positive moral Goodness in a Man's doing what he can, than in a Wind-mill's doing what it can; because the Action does no more proceed from Vertue; and there is Nothing in fuch Sincerity of Endeavour, or doing what we can, that should render it any more a proper or fit Recommendation to positive Favour and Acceptance, or the Condition of any Reward or actual Benefit, than doing Nothing; for both the one and the other are alike Nothing, as to any true moral Weight or Value.

Corol. 2. Hence also it follows, there is Nothing that appears in the Reason and Nature of Things, which can justly lead us to determine, that God will certainly give the necessary Means of Salvation, or some Way or other bestow true Holiness and eternal Life on those Heathen, who are fincere, (in the Sense above explained) in their Endeavours to find out the Will of the Deity, and to please Him, according to their Light, that they may escape his future Dist leasure and Wrath, and obtain Happiness in the suture State, through his Favour.

SECTION VI.

Liberty of Indifference, not only not necessary to Vertue, but utterly inconsistent with it;

And all, either vertuous or vicious Habits or Inclinations, inconsistent with Arminian Notions of Liberty and moral Agency.

O suppose such a Freedom of Will, as Arminians talk of, to be requisite to Vertue and Vice, is many Ways contrary to common Sense.

If Indifference belongs to Liberty of Will, as Arminians suppose, and it be effential to a vertuous Action that it be performed in a State of Liberty, as they also suppose; it will follow, that it is effential to a vertuous Action that it be performed in a State of Indifference: And if it be performed in a State of Indifference, then doubtless it must be performed in the Time of Indisfer-And fo it will follow, that in order to the Vertuousness of an Act, the Heart must be indifferent in the Time of the Performance of that Act, and the more indifferent and cold the Heart is with Relation to the Act which is performed, fo much the better; because the Act is performed with fo much the greater Liberty. But is this agreable to the Light of Nature? Is it agreable to the Notions which Mankind, in all Ages, have of Vertue, that it lies in that which is contrary to Indifference, even in the Tendency and Inclination of the Heart to vertuous Action; and that the stronger the Inclination, and so the further from Indifference, the more vertuous the Heart, and fo much

If we should suppose (contrary to what has been before demonstrated) that there may be an Act of Will in a State of Indifference; for Instance, this Act, viz. The Will's determining to put it felf out of a State of Indifference, and give itself a Preponderation one Way, then it would follow, on Arminian Principles, that this Act or Determination of the Will is that alone wherein Vertue consists, because this only is performed while the Mind remains in a State of Indifference, and fo in a State of Liberty: For when once the Mind is put out of it's Equilibrium, it is no longer in fuch a State; and therefore all the Acts which follow afterwards, proceeding from Bias, can have the Nature neither of Vertue nor Vice. Or if the Thing which the Will can do, while yet in a State of Indifference, and fo of Liberty, be only to fufpend acting, and determine to take the Matter into Confideration, then this Determination is that alone wherein Vertue confifts, and not proceeding to Action after the Scale is turned by Confideration. So that it will follow from these Principles, all that is done after the Mind, by any Means, is once out of it's Equilibrium and already possesfed by an Inclination, and arifing from that Inclination, has nothing of the Nature of Vertue or Vice, and is worthy of neither Blame nor Praife. But how plainly contrary is this to the universal Sense of Mankind, and to the Notion they have of fincerely vertuous Actions? Which is, that they are Actions which proceed from a Heart well disposed and inclined; and the stronger, and the more fix'd and determined the good Disposition of the Heart, the greater the Sincerity of Vertue, and so the more of the Truth and Reality of

of it. But if there be any Acts which are done in a State of Equilibrium, or spring immediately from perfect Indifference and Coldness of Heart, they cannot arise from any good Principle or Disposition in the Heart; and consequently, according to common Sense, have no fincere Goodness in 'em, having no Virtue of Heart in 'em. To have a vertuous Heart, is to have a Heart that favours Vertue, and is friendly to it, and not one perfectly cold and indifferent about it.

And besides the Actions that are done in a State of Indifference, or that arise immediately out of fuch a State, can't be vertuous, because, by the Supposition, they are not determined by any preceeding Choice. For if there be preceeding Choice, then Choice intervenes between the Act and the State of Indifference; which is contrary to the Supposition of the Act's arising immediately out of Indifference. But those Acts which are not determined by preceeding Choice, can't be virtuous or vicious by Arminian Principles, because they are not determined by the Will. So that neither one Way, nor the other, can any Actions be vertuous or vicious according to Arminian Principles. If the Action be determined by a preceeding Act of Choice it can't be vertuous; because the Action is not done in a State of Indifference, nor does immediately arise from such a State; and fo is not done in a State of Liberty. If the Action be not determined by a preceeding Act of Choice, then it can't be vertuous; because then the Will is not Self-determined in it. So that 'tis made certain, that neither Vertue nor Vice can ever find any Place in the Universe.

Moreover, that it is necessary to a vertuous Action that it be performed in a State of Indifference, under a Notion of that's being a State of Liberty, is contrary to common Sense; as 'tis a Dictate of common Sense, that Indifference itself, in many Cases, is vicious, and so to a high Degree. As if when I see my Neighbour or near Friend, and one who has in the highest Degree merited of me, in extreme Distress, and ready to perish, I find an Indisference in my Heart with Respect to any Thing proposed to be done, which I can easily do, for his Relief. So if it should be proposed to me to blaspheme God, or kill my Father, or do numberless other Things which might be mentioned; the being indisferent, for a Moment, would be highly vicious and vile.

And it may be further observed, that to suppose this Liberty of Indifference is essential to Vertue and Vice, destroys the great Difference of Degrees of the Guilt of different Crimes, and takes away the Heinousness of the most flagitious horrid Iniquities; fuch as Adultery, Bestiality, Murder, Perjury, Blasphemy, &c. For according to these Principles, there is no Harm at all in having the Mind in a State of perfect Indifference with Respect to these Crimes; nay, 'tis abfolutely necessary in order to any Vertue in avoiding them, or Vice in doing them. But for the Mind to be in a State of Indifference with Respect to 'em, is to be next Door to doing them: It is then infinitely near to chusing, and so committing the Fact: For Equilibrium is the next Step to a Degree of Preponderation; and one, even the least Degree of Preponderation (all Things confidered) is Choice. And not only fo, but for the Will to be in a State of perfect Equilibrium with Respect to such Crimes, is for the Mind to be in fuch a State, as to be full as likely to chuse 'em as to refuse 'em, to do 'em as to omit 'em. And if our Minds must be in such a State wherein it is as near to chusing as refusing, and wherein it must of Necessity, according to the Nature of Things, be as likely to commit 'em, as to refrain from 'em; where is the exceeding Heinoufness of chusing and committing them? If there be no Harm in often being in fuch a State, wherein the Probability of doing and forbearing are exactly equal, there being an Equilibrium, and no more Tendency to one than the other; then according to the Nature and Laws of fuch a Contingence, it may be expected, as an inevitable Consequence of such a Disposition of Things, that we should chuse 'em as often as reject 'em: That it should generally so fall out is necessary, as Equality in the Effect is the natural Consequence of the equal Tendency of the Cause, or of the antecedent State of Things from which the Effect arises. Why then should we be so exceedingly to blame, if it does fo fall out?

'Tis many Ways apparent, that the Arminian Scheme of Liberty is utterly inconfiftent with the being of any fuch Things as either vertuous or vicious Habits or Dispositions. If Liberty of Indifference be effential to moral Agency, then there can be no Vertue in any habitual Inclinations of the Heart; which are contrary to Indifference, and imply in their Nature the very De-Aruction and Exclusion of it. They suppose nothing can be vertuous, in which no Liberty is exercifed; but how abfurd is it to talk of exercifing Indifference under Bias and Preponderation!

And if felf-determining Power in the Will be neceffary to moral Agency, Praife, Blame, &c. then nothing done by the Will can be any further Praise or Blame-worthy, than so far as the Will is moved, fwayed and determined by it felf, and the Scales turned by the fovereign Power the Will has over it felf. And therefore the Will must not be put out of it's Balance already, the Preponderation must not be determined and effected before hand; and fo the felf-determining Act anticipated. Thus it appears another Way, that habitual Bias is inconsistent with that Liberty which Arminians suppose to be necessary to Vertue or Vice; and fo it follows, that habitual Bias it felf cannot be either vertuous or vicious.

The fame Thing follows from their Doctrine concerning the Inconfistence of Necessity with Liberty, Praife, Dispraise, &c. None will deny, that Bias and Inclination may be fo strong as to be invincible, and leave no Possibility of the Will's determining contrary to it; and so be attended with Necessity. This Dr. Whithy allows concerning the Will of God, Angels, and glorified Saints, with Respect to Good; and the Will of Devils with Respect to Evil. Therefore if Necessity be inconsistent with Liberty; then when fix'd Inclination is to fuch a Degree of Strength, it utterly excludes all Vertue, Vice, Praise or Blame. And if so, then the nearer Habits are to this Strength, the more do they impede Liberty, and so diminish Praise and Blame. If very strong Habits destroy Liberty, the lesser Ones proportionably hinder it, according to their Degree of Strength. And therefore it will follow, that then is the Act most vertuous or vicious, when performed without any Inclination or habitual Bias at all; because it is then performed with most Liberty.

Every pre-poffefling fix'd Bias on the Mind brings a Degree of moral Inability for the contrary; trary; because so far as the Mind is biassed and pre-possessed, so much Hindrance is there of the contrary. And therefore if moral Inability be inconsistent with moral Agency, or the Nature of Vertue and Vice, then so far as there is any such Thing as evil Disposition of Heart, or habitual Depravity of Inclination; whether Covetousness, Pride, Malice, Cruelty, or whatever else; so much the more excuseable Persons are; so much the less have their evil Acts of this Kind, the Nature of Vice. And on the contrary, whatever excellent Dispositions and Inclinations they have, so much are they the less vertuous.

'Tis evident, that no habitual Disposition of Heart, whether it be to a greater or lesser Degree, can be in any Degree vertuous or vicious; or the Actions which proceed from them at all Praise or Blame-worthy. Because, though we should suppose the Habit not to be of such Strength as wholly to take away all moral Ability and felfdetermining Power; or hinder but that, although the Act be partly from Bias, yet it may be in Part from Self-determination; yet in this Cafe, all that is from antecedent Bias must be set aside, as of no Confideration; and in estimating the Degree of Virtue or Vice, no more must be confidered than what arifes from felf-determining Power, without any Influence of that Bias, because Lib rty is exercised in no more: So that all that is the Exercise of habitual Inclination, is thrown away, as not belonging to the Morality of the Action. By which it appears, that no Exercife of these Habits, let 'em be stronger or weaker, can ever have any Thing of the Nature of either Vertue or Vice.

Here if any one should say, that notwithstanding all these Things, there may be the Nature of Vertue and Vice in Habits of the Mind; because these Habits may be the Effects of those Acts wherein the Mind exercised Liberty; that however the forementioned Reasons will prove that no Habits which are natural, or that are born or created with us, can be either vertuous or vicious; yet they will not prove this of Habits, which have been acquired and establish'd by repeated free Acts.

To fuch an Objector I would fay, that this Evasion will not at all help the Matter. For if Freedom of Will be effential to the very Nature of Vertue and Vice, then there is no Vertue or Vice but only in that very Thing, wherein this Liberty is exercifed. If a Man in one or more Things that he does, exercises Liberty, and then by those Acts is brought into fuch Circumstances, that his Liberty ceases, and there follows a long Series of Acts or Events that come to pass necessarily; those confequent Acts are not vertuous or vicious, rewardable or punishable; but only the free Acts that establish'd this Necessity; for in them alone was the Man free. The following Effects that are necessary, have no more of the Nature of Vertue or Vice, than Health or Sickness of Body have properly the Nature of Vertue or Vice, being the Effects of a Course of free Acts of Temperance or Intemperance; or than the good Qualities of a Clock are of the Nature of Vertue, which are the Effects of free Acts of the Artificer; or the Goodness and Sweetness of the Fruits of a Garden are moral Vertues, being the Effects of the free and faithful Acts of the Gardener. If Liberty be absolutely requisite to the Morality of Actions, and Necessity wholly inconfishent with it, as Arminians greatly infift; then no necessary Effects whatsoever, let the Cause be never so good or bad, can be vertuous or vicious; but the Vertue or Vice must be only in the tree Cause. Agreably to this, Dr. Whithy supposes, the Necessity that attends the good and evil Habits of the Saints in Heaven, and Damned in Hell, which are the Consequence of their free Acts in their State of Probation, are not rewardable or punishable.

On the whole, it appears, that if the Notions of Arminians concerning Liberty and moral Agency be true, it will follow that there is no Vertue in any fuch Habits or Qualities as Humility, Meekness, Patience, Mercy, Gratitude, Generofity, Heavenly-mindedness; Nothing at all Praiseworthy in loving Christ above Father and Mother, Wife and Children, or our own Lives; or in Delight in Holiness, hungring and thirsting after Righteousness, Love to Enemies, universal Benevolence to Mankind: And on the other Hand, there is nothing at all vicious, or worthy of Difpraise, in the most fordid, beastly, malignant devilish Dispositions; in being ungrateful, profane, habitually hating God, and Things facred and holy; or in being most treacherous, envious and cruel towards Men. For all these Things are Dispositions and Inclinations of the Heart. And in fhort, there is no fuch Thing as any vertuous or vicious Quality of Mind; no fuch Thing as inherent Vertue and Holiness, or Vice and Sin: And the stronger those Habits or Dispositions are, which used to be called vertuous and vicious, the further they are from being fo indeed; the more violent Men's Lutt's are, the more fix'd their Pride, Envy, Ingratitude and Malicioufness, still the further are they from being blame-worthy. If there be a Man that by his own repeated Acts, or by any other Means, is come to be of the most hellish Disposition, desperately inclined to treat his Neighbours with Injurioufness, Contempt and Malignity; the further they should be from any Disposition to be angry with Him, or in the least to blame Him. So on the other Hand, if there be a Person, who is of a most excellent Spirit, ftrongly inclining him to the most amiable Actions, admirably meek, benevolent, &c. fo much is he further from any Thing rewardable or commendable. On which Principles, the Man Jesus Christ was very far from being Praise-worthy for those Acts of Holiness and Kindness which He performed, these Propensities being so strong in his Heart. And above all, the infinitely holy and gracious God, is infinitely remote from any Thing commendable, his good Inclinations being infinitely strong, and He therefore at the utmost possible Distance from being at Liberty. And in all Cases, the stronger the Inclinations of any are to Vertue, and the more they love it, the less vertuous they are; and the more they love Wickedness, the less vicious .--- Whether these Things are agreable to Scripture, let every Christian, and every Man who has read the Bible, judge: and whether they are agreable to common Sense, let every one judge, that have human Understanding in Exercise.

And if we pursue these Principles, we shall find that Vertue and Vice are wholly excluded out of the World; and that there never was, nor ever can be any fuch Thing as one or the other; either in God, Angels or Men. No Propenfity, Difposition or Habit can be vertuous or vicious, as has been fhewn; because they, so far as they take Place, destroy the Freedom of the Will, the Foundation of all moral Agency, and exclude all Capacity

Sect. VI. with moral Habits & Motives. 259

Capacity of either Vertue or Vice.—And if Habits and Dispositions themselves be not vertuous nor vicious, neither can the Exercise of these Dispositions be so: For the Exercise of Bias is not the Exercise of free self-determining Will, and fo there is no Exercise of Liberty in it. Consequently no Man is vertuous or vicious, either in being well or ill disposed, nor in acting from a good or bad Disposition. And whether this Bias or Disposition be habitual or not, if it exists but a Moment before the Act of Will, which is the Effect of it, it alters not the Case, as to the Neceffity of the Effect. Or if there be no previous Disposition at all, either habitual or occasional, that determines the Act, then it is not Choice that determines it: It is therefore a Contingence, that happens to the Man, arifing from Nothing in him; and is necessary, as to any Inclination or Choice of his; and therefore can't make Him either the better or worse, any more than a Tree is better than other Trees, because it oftener happens to be lit upon by a Swan or Nightingal: or a Rock more vicious than other Rocks, because Rattle-Snakes have happen'd oftner to crawl over it. So that there is no Vertue nor Vice in good or bad Dispositions, either fix'd or transient; nor any Virtue or Vice in acting from any good or bad previous Inclination; nor yet any Virtue or Vice in acting wholly without any previous Inclination. Where then shall we find Room for Verrue or Vice?

SECTION VII.

Arminian Notions of moral Agency inconfiltent with all Influence of Motive and Inducement, in either vertuous or vicious Actions.

A S Arminian Notions of that Liberty, which is effential to Vertue or Vice, are inconfiftent with common Sense, in their being inconfiftent with all vertuous or vicious Habits and Dispositions; so they are no less so in their Inconfishency with all Influence of Motives in moral Actions.

'Tis equally against those Notions of Liberty of Will, whether there be, previous to the Act of Choice, a Preponderancy of the Inclination, or a Preponderancy of those Circumstances, which have a Tendency to move the Inclination. And indeed it comes to just the same Thing: To say, the Circumstances of the Mind are such as tend to sway and turn it's Inclination one Way, is the same Thing as to say, the Inclination of the Mind, as under such Circumstances, tends that Way.

Or if any think it most proper to say, that Motives do alter the Inclination, and give a new Bias to the Mind; it will not alter the Case, as to the present Argument. For if Motives operate by giving the Mind an Inclination, then they operate by destroying the Mind's Indisference, and laying it under a Bias. But to do this, is to destroy the Arminian Freedom: It is not to leave the Will to it's own Self-determination, but to bring it into Subjection to the Power of something extrinsick.

Sect. VII. with Arminian Vertue and Vice. 261 trinfick, which operates upon it, fways and determines it, previous to it's own Determination. So that what is done from Motive, can't be either vertuous or vicious.-And besides, if the Acts of the Will are excited by Motives, those Motives are the Causes of those Acts of the Will: which makes the Acts of the Will necessary; as Effects necessarily follow the Efficiency of the Cause. And if the Influence and Power of the Motive causes the Volition, then the Influence of the Motive determines Volition, and Volition don't determine it felf; and fo is not free, in the Sense of Arminians (as has been largely shewn already) and confequently can be neither vertuous nor vicious.

The Supposition, which has already been taken Notice of as an insufficient Evasion in other Cases, would be in like Manner impertinently alledged in this Case; namely, the Supposition that Liberty consists in a Power of suspending Action for the present, in order to Deliberation. If it should be faid, Tho' it be true, that the Will is under a Necessity of finally following the strongest Motive, yet it may for the present forbear to act upon the Motive presented, till there has been Opportunity thoroughly to consider it, and compare it's real Weight with the Merit of other Motives. I answer as follows.

Here again it must be remember'd, that if determining thus to suspend and consider, be that Act of the Will wherein alone Liberty is exercised, then in this all Vertue and Vice must consist; and the Acts that follow this Consideration, and are the Effects of it, being necessary, are no more virtuous or vicious than some good or bad Events which happen when they are fait assep,

- 262 Motive & Inducement inconsistent Part III. and are the Consequences of what they did when they were awake. Therefore I would here observe two Things.
- 1. To suppose that all Vertue and Vice, in every Case, consists in determining whether to take Time for Confideration, or not, is not agreable to common Sense. For according to such a Supposition, the most horrid Crimes, Adultery, Murder, Buggery, Blasphemy, &c. do not at all confift in the horrid Nature of the Things themfelves, but only in the Neglect of thorough Confideration before they were perpetrated, which brings their Viciousness to a small Matter, and makes all Crimes equal. It it be faid, that Neglect of Confideration, when fuch heinous Evils are proposed to Choice, is worse than in other Cases: I answer, this is inconfiftent, as it supposes the very Thing to be, which at the same Time is supposed not to be; it supposes all moral Evil, all Viciousness and Heinousness, does not consist meerly in the want of Confideration. It supposes some Crimes in themselves, in their own Nature, to be more heinous than others, antecedent to Confideration or Inconfideration, which lays the Perfon under a previous Obligation to confider in some Cases more than others.
- 2. If it were fo, that all Vertue and Vice, in every Case, consisted only in the Act of the Will, whereby it determines whether to consider or no, it would not alter the Case in the least, as to the present Argument. For still in this Act of the Will on this Determination, it is induced by some Motive, and necessarily follows the strongest Motive; and so is necessary, even in that Act wherein alone it is either vertuous or vicious.

Sect. VII. with Arminian Vertue & Vice. 263

One Thing more I would observe, concerning the Inconfistence of Arminian Notions of moral Agency with the Influence of Motives .- I fuppose none will deny, that 'tis possible for Motives to be fet before the Mind to powerful, and exhibited in fo ftrong a Light, and under fo advantageous Circumstances, as to be invincible; and such as the Mind cannot but yield to. this Case, Arminians will doubtless say, Liberty. is destroyed. And if so, then if Motives are exhibited with half fo much Power, they hinder Liberty in Proportion to their Strength, and go half-way towards deftroying it. If a thousand Degrees of Motive abolith all Liberty, then five Hundred take it half away. If one Degree of the Influence of Motive don't at all infringe or diminish Liberty, then no more do two Degrees; for Nothing doubled, is still Nothing. And if two Degrees don't diminish the Will's Liberty, no more do four, eight, fixteen, or fix Thousand. For Nothing multiplied never fo much, comes to but Nothing. If there be nothing in the Nature of Motive or moral Suafion, that is at all oppofite to Liberty, then the greatest Degree of it can't hurt Liberty. But if there be any Thing in the Nature of the Thing, that is against Liberty, then the least Degree of it hurts it in some Degree; and confequently hurts and diminishes Vertue. If invincible Motives to that Action which is good, take away all the Freedom of the Act, and fo all the Vertue of it; then the more forceable the Motives are, fo much the worfe, fo much the lefs Vertue; and the weaker the Motives are, the better for the Cause of Vertue; and none is best of all.

Now let it be confidered, whether these Things are agreable to common Sense. If it should be S 4 allowed, allowed, that there are some Instances wherein the Soul chuses without any Motive, what Vertue can there be in such a Choice? I am sure, there is no Prudence or Wisdom in it. Such a Choice is made for no good End; for it is for no End at all. If it were for any End, the View of the End would be the Motive exciting to the Act; and if the Act be for no good End, and so from no good Aim, then there is no good Intention in it: And therefore, according to all our natural Notions of Vertue, no more Vertue in it than in the Motion of the Smoke, which is driven to and fro by the Wind, without any Aim or End in the Thing moved, and which knows not whither, nor why and wherefore, it is moved.

Corol. 1. By these Things it appears, that the Argument against the Calvinists, taken from the Use of Counsels, Exhortations, Invitations, Expostulations, &c. fo much insisted on by Arminians, is truly against themselves. For these Things can operate no other Way to any good Effect, than as in them is exhibited Motive and Inducement, tending to excite and determine the Acts of the Will. But it follows on their Principles, that the Acts of Will excited by fuch Causes, can't be vertuous; because so far as they are from these, they are not from the Will's felf-determining Power. Hence it will follow, that it is not worth the while to offer any Arguments to perswade Men to any vertuous Volition or voluntary Action; 'sis in vain to set before them the Wisdom and Amiableness of Ways of Vertue, or the Odioufness and Folly of Ways of Vice. This Notion of Liberty and moral Agency frustrates all Endeayours to draw Men to Vertue by Instruction, or Perswasion, Precept, or Example: For tho' these Things may induce Men to what is meterially Se.VII. of Invitas. &c. against themselves. 265 terially vertuous, yet at the same Time they take away the Form of Vertue, because they destroy Liberty; as they, by their own Power, put the Will out of it's Equilibrium, determine and turn the Scale, and take the Work of felf-determining Power out of it's Hands. And the clearer the Instructions are that are given, the more powerful the Arguments that are used, and the more moving the Perswasions or Examples, the more likely they are to frustrate their own Design; Because they have so much the greater Tendency to put the Will out of it's Balance, to hinder it's Freedom of felf-determination; and fo to exclude the very Form of Vertue, and the Effence of whatfoever is Praife-worthy.

So it clearly follows from these Principles, that God has no Hand in any Man's Vertue, nor does at all promote it, either by a physical or moral Influence; that none of the moral Methods He uses with Men to promote Vertue in the World, have Tendency to the Attainment of that End; that all the Instructions which He has given to Men, from the Beginning of the World to this Day, by Prophets, or Apostles, or by his Son Jesus Christ; that all his Counsels, Invitations, Promifes, Threatnings, Warnings and Expostulations; that all Means He has used with Men, in Ordinances, or Providences; yea, all Influences of his Spirit, ordinary and extraordinary, have had no Tendency at all to excite any one vertuous Act of the Mind, or to promote any Thing morally good and commendable, in any Respect.---For there is no Way that these or any other Means can promote Vertue, but one of these three. Either (1.) By a physical Operation on the Heart. But all Effects that are wrought in Men in this Way, have no Vertue in them, by 266 Arminianism excludes all Vertue, Part III. the concurring Voice of all Arminians. Or (2.) Morally, by exhibiting Motives to the Understanding, to excite good Acts in the Will. But it has been demonstrated, that Volitions which are excited by Motives, are necessary, and not excited by a felf moving Power; and therefore, by their Principles, there is no Vertue in them. Or (3.) By meerly giving the Will an Opportunity to determine it felf concerning the Objects proposed, either to chuse or reject, by it's own uncaused, unmoved, uninfluenced self-determination. And if this be all, then all those Means do no more to promote Virtue than Vice: For they do Nothing but give the Will Opportunity to determine it self either Way, either to Good or Bad, without laying it under any Bias to either: And fo there is really as much of an Opportunity given to determine in Favour of Evil, as of Good.

Thus that horrid blasphemous Consequence will certainly follow from the Arminian Doctrine, which they charge on others; namely, that God acts an. inconfistent Part in using so many Counsels, Warnings, Invitations, Intreaties, &c. with Sinners, to induce 'em to forsake Sin, and turn to the Ways of Vertue; and that all are infincere and fallacious. It will follow from their Doctrine. that God does these Things when He knows at the same Time, that they have no Manner of Tendency to promote the Effect He feems to aim at; yea, knows that if they have any Influence, this very Influence will be inconfiftent with fuch an Effect, and will prevent it. But what an Imputation of Infincerity would this fix on Him who is infinitely holy and true!---So that their's is the Doctrine which if purfued in it's Consequences, does horribly reflect on the most High, and Sect. VII. and Vice, out of the World. 267 and fix on Him the Charge of Hypocrify; and not the Doctrine of the Calvinift; according to their frequent, and vehement Exclamations and Invectives.

Corol. 2. From what has been observed in this Section, it again appears, that Arminian Principles and Notions, when fairly examined, and purfued in their demonstrable Consequences, do evidently shut all Vertue out of the World, and make it impossible that there should ever be any such Thing, in any Cafe; or that any fuch Thing should ever be conceiv'd of. For by these Principles, the very Notion of Vertue or Vice implies Absurdity and Contradiction. For it is absurd in it felf, and contrary to common Senfe, to suppose a vertuous Act of Mind without any good Intention or Aim; and by their Principles, it is abfurd to suppose a vertuous Act with a good Intention or Aim; for to act for an End, is to act from a Motive. So that if we rely on these Principles, there can be no vertuous Act with a good Defign and End; and 'tis felf-evident, there can be none without: confequently there can be no vertuous Act at all.

Corol. 3. 'Tis manifest, that Arminian Notions of moral Agency, and the Being of a Faculty of Will, cannot consist together; and that if there be any such Thing as, either a vertuous, or vicious Act, it can't be an Act of Will; no Will can be at all concerned in it. For that Act which is performed without Inclination, without Motive, without End, must be performed without any Concern of the Will. To suppose an Act of the Will without these, implies a Contradiction. If the Soul in it's Act has no Motive or End; then in that Act (as was observed before) it seeks Nothing, thing, goes after Nothing, exerts no Inclination to any Thing; and this implies, that in that Act it desires Nothing, and chuses Nothing; so that there is no Act of Choice in the Case: And that is as much as to say, there is no Act of Will in the Case. Which very effectually shuts all vicious and vertuous Acts out of the Universe; in as much as, according to this, there can be no vicious or vertuous Act wherein the Will is concerned; and according to the plainest Dictates of Reason, and the Light of Nature, and also the Principles of Arminians themselves, there can be no vertuous or vicious Act wherein the Will is not concerned. And therefore there is no Room for any vertuous or vicious Acts at all.

Corol. 4. If none of the moral Actions of intelligent Beings are influenced by either previous Inclination or Motive, another strange Thing will follow; and this is, that God not only can't foreknow any of the future moral Actions of his Creatures, but He can make no Conjecture, can give no probable Guess concerning them. For, all Conjecture in Things of this Nature, must depend on some Discerning or Apprehension of these two Things, previous Disposition, and Motive; which, as has been observed, Arminian Notions of moral Agency, in their real Consequence, altogether exclude.

PART IV.

Wherein the chief Grounds of the Reasonings of Arminians, in Support and Defence of the foremention'd Notions of Liberty, moral Agency, &c. and against the opposite Doctrine, are considered.

SECTION I.

The Essence of the Vertue and Vice of Dispositions of the Heart, and Acts of the Will, lies not in their Cause, but their Nature.

NE main Foundation of the Reasons, which are brought to establish the foremention'd Notions of Liberty, Vertue, Vice, &c. is a Supposition, that the Vertuousness of the Dispositions or Acts of the Will consists not in the Nature of these Dispositions or Acts, but wholly in the Origin or Cause of them: so that if the Disposition of the Mind or Acts of the Will be never 270 Of the Essence of Vertue and Vice. Part IV. fo good, yet if the Cause of the Disposition or Act be not our Vertue, there is nothing vertuous or praise-worthy in it; and on the contrary, if the Will in it's Inclination or Acts be never fo bad, yet unless it arises from something that is our Vice or Fault, there is Nothing vicious or blame-worthy in it. Hence their grand Objection and pretended Demonstration, or Self-Evidence, against any Vertue and Commendableness, or Vice and Blame-worthiness, of those Habits or

Now, if this Matter be well confidered, it will appear to be altogether a Mistake, yea, a gross Abfurdity; and that it is most certain, that if there be any fuch Things, as a vertuous, or vicious Disposition, or Volition of Mind, the Vertuoufness or Viciousness of them consists not in the Origin or Cause of these Things, but in the Nature of them.

Acts of the Will, which are not from some vertuous or vicious Determination of the Will it felf.

If the Effence of Vertuousness or Commendableness, and of Viciousness or Fault, don't lie in the Nature of the Dispositions or Acts of Mind, which are faid to be our Vertue or our Fault, but in their Cause, then it is certain it lies no where at all. Thus, for Instance, if the Vice of a vicious Act of Will, lies not in the Nature of the Act, but the Cause; so that it's bring of a bad Nature will not make it at all our Fault, unless it arises from fome faulty Determination of our's as it's Cause, or fomething in us that is our Fault; then for the same Reason, neither can the Viciousness of that Cause lie in the Nature of the Thing it felf, but in it's Cause: that evil Determination of our's is not our. Fault, meerly because it is of a bad Nature, unless it arises from some Cause in us that is our Fault. And when we are come to this higher Cause, still the Reason of the Thing holds good; tho' this Cause be of a bad Nature, vet we are not at all to blame on that Account, unless it arises from something faulty in us. Nor vet can Blame-worthiness lie in the Nature of this Cause, but in the Cause of that. And thus we must drive Faultiness back from Step to Step, from a lower Cause to a higher, in infinitum: and that is thoroughly to banish it from the World, and to allow it no possibility of Existence any where in the Universality of Things. On these Principles, Vice or moral Evil can't confift in any Thing that is an Effect; because Fault don't confift in the Nature of Things, but in their Cause; as well as because Effects are necessary, being unavoidably connected with their Cause: therefore the Cause only is to blame. And so it follows, that Faultiness can lie only in that Cause, which is a Cause only, and no Effect of any Thing. Nor yet can it lie in this; for then it must lie in the Nature of the Thing it felf; not in it's being from any Determination of our's, nor any Thing faulty in us which is the Cause, nor indeed from any Cause at all, for by the Supposition, it is no Effect, and bas no Caufe. And thus, He that will maintain, it is not the Nature of Habits or Acts of Will that makes them vertuous or faulty, but the Cause, must immediately run Himself out of his own Affertion; and in maintaining it, will infenfibly contradict and deny it.

This is certain, that if Effects are vicious and faulty, not from their Nature, or from any Thing inherent in them, but because they are from a bad Cause, it must be on Account of the Badness of the Cause; and so on Account of the Nature of the Caufe: A bad Effect in the Will must be bad, because the Cause is bad, or of an evil Nature, or has Badness as a Quality inherent in it: and a good Effect 272 The Essence of Vertue and Vice. Part IV.

Effect in the Will must be good, by Reason of the Goodness of the Cause, or it's being of a good Kind and Nature. And if this be what is meant, the very Supposition of Fault and Praise lying not in the Nature of the Thing, but the Cause, contradicts it felf, and does at least resolve the Essence of Vertue and Vice into the Nature of Things, and supposes it originally to consist in that .--- And if a Caviller has a Mind to run from the Abfurdity, by faying, "No, the Fault of the Thing "which is the Cause, lies not in this, that the " Cause it self is of an evil Nature, but that the "Cause is evil in that Sense, that it is from an-" other bad Cause." Still the Absurdity will follow him; for if fo, then the Cause before charged is at once acquitted, and all the Blame must be laid to the higher Cause, and must consist in that's being Evil, or of an evil Nature. So now we are come again to lay the Blame of the Thing blame worthy, to the Nature of the Thing, and not to the Cause. And if any is so foolish as to go higher still, and ascend from Step to Step, till he is come to that which is the first Cause concerned in the whole Affair, and will fay, all the Blame lies in that; then at last he must be forced to own, that the Faultiness of the Thing which he fupposes alone blame-worthy, lies wholly in the Nature of the Thing, and not in the Original or Cause of it; for the Supposition is, that it has no Original, it is determined by no Act of our's, is caused by nothing faulty in us, being absolutely without any Caufe. And so the Race is at an End, but the Evader is taken in his Flight.

'Tis agreable to the natural Notions of Mankind, that moral Evil, with it's Defert of Dislike and Abhorrence, and all it's other Ill-deservings, consists in a certain Desormity in the Nature of certain Dispositions of the Heart, and Acts of the

Will;

Sect. I. in the Nature of Volition, &c. 273
Will; and not in the Deformity of fomething elfe; diverse from the very Thing it self, which deserves Abhorrence, supposed to be the Cause of ir. Which would be absurd, because that would be to suppose, a Thing that is innocent and not Evil, is truly evil and faulty, because another Thing is Evil. It implies a Contradiction; for it would be to suppose, the very Thing which is morally evil and blame-worthy, is innocent and not blame-worthy; but that something else, which is it's Cause; is only to blame. To say, that Vice don't consist in the Thing which is vicious, but in it's Cause, is the same as to say, that Vice don't consist in Vice, but in that which produces it.

'Tis true, a Cause may be to blame, for being the Cause of Vice: It may be Wickedness in the Cause, that it produces Wickedness. But it would imply a Contradiction, to suppose that these two are the same individual Wickedness. The wicked Act of the Cause in producing Wickedness, is one Wickedness; and the Wickedness produced, if there be any produced, is another. And therefore the Wickedness of the latter don't lie in the sormer, but is distinct from it; and the Wickedness of both lies in the evil Nature of the Things which are wicked.

The Thing which makes Sin hateful, is that by which it deferves Punishment; which is but the Expression of Eatred. And that which renders Vertue lovely, is the same with that, on the Account of which, it is fit to receive Praise and Reward; which are but the Expressions of Esteem and Love. But that which makes Vice hateful, is it's hateful Nature; and that which renders Vertue lovely, is it's amiable Nature. 'Tis a certain Beauty or Desormity that are inherent in that good or evil Will, which is the Soul of Vertue and Vice (and not in the Occasion of it) which is their Worthiness of Esteem or Disesteem, Praise or Dispraise, according to the common Sense of Mankind. If the Cause or Occasion of the Rise of an hateful Disposition or Act of Will, be also hateful; suppose another antecedent evil Will; that is entirely another Sin, and deserves Punishment by it self, under a distinct Consideration. There is Worthiness of Dispraise in the Nature of an evil Volition, and not wholly in some foregoing Act which is it's Cause; otherwise the evil Volition which is the Estect, is no moral Evil, any more than Sickness, or some other natural Calamity, which arises from a Cause morally evil.

Thus, for Instance, Ingratitude is hateful and worthy of Dispraise, according to common Sense; not because something as bad, or worse than Ingratitude, was the Caufe that produced it; but because it is hateful in it self, by it's own inherent Deformity. So the Love of Vertue is amiable, and worthy of Praife, not meerly because something else went before this Love of Vertue in our Minds, which caused it to take Place there; for Instance our own Choice; we chose to love Vertue, and by fome Method or other wrought our felves into the Love of it; but because of the Amiableness and Condecency of such a Disposition and Inclination of Heart. If that was the Cafe, that we did chuse to love Vertue, and so produced that Love in our felves, this Choice it felf could be no otherwise amiable or praise worthy, than as Love to Vertue, or some other amiable Inclination, was exercised and implied in it. If that Choice was amiable at all, it must be so on Account of some amiable Quality in the Narure of the Choice. If we chole to love Vertue, Sc.I. in the Nat of Volition, not in the Cause. 275 not in Love to Vertue, or any Thing that was good, and exercised no fort of good Disposition in the Choice, the Choice it self was not vertuous, nor worthy of any Praise, according to common Sense, because the Choice was not of a good Nature.

It may not be improper here to take Notice of fomething faid by an Author, that has lately made a mighty Noise in America. "A necessary Holi-" lines (fays He *) is no Holiness.—Adam could " not be originally created in Righteousness and " true Holinefs, because He must chuse to be " righteous, before He could be righteous. And "therefore He must exist, He must be created, " yea, He must exercise Thought and Reslection, " before He was righteous." There is much more to the same Effect in that Place, and also in P. 437, 438, 439, 440. If thefe Things are fo. it will certainly follow, that the first chusing to be righteous is no righteous Choice; there is no Righteoufness or Holiness in it; because no chufing to be righteous goes before it. For he plainly speaks of chusing to be righteous, as what must go before Righteousness: And that which follows the Choice, being the Effect of the Choice, can't be Righteoushess or Holiness: For an Effect is a Thing necessary, and can't prevent the Influence or Efficacy of it's Cause; and therefore is unavoidably dependent upon the Caufe: And He fays, A necessary Holiness is no Holiness. So that neither can a Choice of Rightcoulness be Righteoufnels or Holinefs, nor can any Thing that is consequent on that Choice, and the Effect of it, be Rightcouiness or Holiness; nor can any Thing that is without Choice, be Rightcousness or Holi-T 2 ness.

^{*} Scrip. Doc. of Original Sin, P. 180. 3d Edit.

276 The Essence of Vertue and Vice, Part IV. ness. So that by his Scheme, all Righteousness and Holiness is at once shut out of the World, and no Door lest open, by which it can ever possibly enter into the World.

I suppose, the Way that Men came to entertain this abfurd inconfistent Notion, with Respect to internal Inclinations and Volitions themselves, (or Notions that imply it,) viz. that the Essence of their moral Good or Evil lies not in their Nature, but their Cause; was, that it is indeed a very plain Dictate of common Sense, that it is so with Respect to all outward Actions, and fensible Motions of the Body; that the moral Good or Evil of 'em don't lie at all in the Motions themselves; which taken by themselves, are nothing of a moral Nature; and the Effence of all the moral Good or Evil that concerns them, lies in those internal Dispofitions and Volitions which are the Caufe of them. Now being always used to determine this, without Hesitation or Dispute, concerning external Astions; which are the Things that in the common Use of Language are fignified by such Phrases, as Men's Actions, or their Doings; Hence when they came to speak of Volitions, and internal Exercises of their Inclinations, under the same Denomination of their Actions, or what they do, they unwarily determined the Case must also be the fame with these, as with external Actions; not confidering the vast Difference in the Nature of the Cafe.

If any shall still object and say, Why is it not necessary that the Cause should be considered, in order to determine whether any Thing be worthy of Blame or Praise? Is it agreable to Reason and coramon Sense, that a Man is to be praised or blamed

Se.I. in the Nate of Volition, not in the Cause. 277 blamed for that which he is not the Cause or Author of, and has no Hand in?

I answer, such Phrases as being the Cause, being the Author, having a Hand, and the like are ambiguous. They are most vulgally understood for being the defigning voluntary Caufe, or Caufe by antecedent Choice: And it is most certain that Men are not in this Sense the Causes or Authors of the first Act of their Wills, in any Case; as certain as any Thing is, or ever can be; for nothing can be more certain, than that a Thing is not before it is, nor a Thing of the fame Kind before the first Thing of that Kind; and so no Choice before the first Choice .--- As the Phrase, being the Author, may be understood, not of being the Producer by an antecedent Act of Will; but as a Person may be faid to be the Author of the Act of Will it felf, by his being the immediate Agent, or the Being that is alling, or in Exercise in that Act; If the Phrase of being the Author, is used to fignify this, then doubtless common Sense requires Men's being the Authors of their own Acts of Will, in order to their being esteemed worthy of Praise or Dispraise on Account of them. And common Sense teaches, that they must be the Authors of external Astions, in the former Senfe, namely, their being the Caufes of 'em by an Act of Will or Choice, in order to their being justly blamed or praised: But it teaches no fuch Thing with Respect to the Acts of the Will themselves. ---- But this may appear more manifest by the Things which will be obferved in the following Section.

SECTION II.

The Falseness and Inconsistence of that meta-physical Notion of Action, and Agency, which seems to be generally entertained by the Defenders of the Arminian Doctrine concerning Liberty, moral Agency, &c.

NE Thing that is made very much a Ground of Argument and fupposed Demonstration by Arminians, in Defence of the fore-mentioned Principles, concerning moral Agency, Vertue, Vice, &c. is their metaphyfical Notion of Agency and Action. They fay, unless the Soul has a Self-determining Power, it has no Power of Astion; If it's Volitions be not caused by itself, but are excited and determined by fome extrinsic Cause, they can't be the Soul's own Ass; and that the Soul can't be active, but must be wholly passive, in those Effects which it is the Subject of necessarily, and not from it's own free Determination.

Mr. Chubb lays the Foundation of his Scheme of Liberty, and of his Arguments to support it, very much in this Position, That Man is an Agent, and capable of Assion. Which doubtless is true: But Self-determination belongs to his Notion of Action, and is the very Effence of it. Whence he infers that it is impossible for a Man to act and be acted upon, in the fame Thing, at the fame Time; and that nothing that is an Action, can be the Effect of the Action of another: and he infifts, that a nevellary Agent, or an Agent that is necessarily determined to act, is a plain Contradistion.

But those are a precarious Sort of Demonstrations, which Men build on the Meaning that they arbitrarily affix to a Word; especially when that Meaning is abstruse, inconsistent, and entirely diverse from the original Sense of the Word in common Speech.

That the Meaning of the Word Action, as Mr. Chubb and many others use it, is utterly unintelligible and inconsistent, is manifest, because it belongs to their Notion of an Action, that 'tis fomething wherein is no Passion or Passiveness; that is (according to their Sense of Passiveness) it is under the Power, Influence or Action of no Caufe. And this implies, that Action has no Caufe, and is no Effect: for to be an Effect implies Passivenefs, or the being subject to the Power and Action of it's Cause. And yet they hold, that the Mind's Action is the Effect of it's own Determination, yea, the Mind's free and voluntary Determination; which is the same with free Choice. So that Action is the Effect of fomething preceding, even a preceeding Act of Choice: And confequently, in this Effect the Mind is passive, subject to the Power and Action of the preceeding Cause, which is the foregoing Choice, and therefore can't be active. So that here we have this Contradiction, that Action is always the Effect of foregoing Choice; and therefore can't be Action; because it is passive to the Power of that preceeding causal Choice; and the Mind can't be active and passive in the same Thing, at the same Time. Again, they fay, Necessity is utterly inconsistent with Action, and a necessary Action is a Contradiction; and fo their Notion of Action implies Contingence, and excludes all Necessity. And therefore their Notion of Action implies, that it has no necessary Dependence or Connection with T 4

280 The Arminian Notion of Action, Part IV. any Thing foregoing; for fuch a Dependence or Connection excludes Contingence, and implies Necessity. And yet their Notion of Action implies Necessity, and supposes that it is necessary, and can't be contingent. For they suppose, that whatever is properly called Action, must be determined by the Will and free Choice; and this is as much as to fay, that it must be necessary, being dependent upon, and determined by fomething foregoing; namely, a foregoing Act of Choice. Again, it belongs to their Notion of Action, of that which is a proper and meer Act, that it is the Beginning of Motion, or of Exertion of Power; but yet it is implied in their Notion of Action, that it is not the Beginning of Motion or Exertion of Power, but is consequent and dependent on a preceeding Exertion of Power, viz. the Power of Will and Choice: for they fay there is no proper Action but what is freely chosen; or, which is the fame Thing, determined by a foregoing Act of free Choice. But if any of them shall see Cause to deny this, and say they hold no fuch Thing as that every Action is chosen, or determined by a foregoing Choice; but that the very first Exertion of Will only, undetermined by any preceeding Act, is properly called Action; then I fay, fuch a Man's Notion of Action implies Necessity; for what the Mind is the Subject of without the Determination of it's own previous Choice, it is the Subject of necessarily, as to any Hand that free Choice has in the Affair; and without any Ability the Mind has to prevent it, by any Will or Election of it's own: because by the Supposition it precludes all previous Acts of the Will or Choice in the Case, which might prevent it. So that it is again, in this other Way, implied in their Notion of Act, that it is both necessary and not necessary. Again, it belongs to their Notion of an At, that it is no Effect of a pre-determining Bias or Preponderation, but springs immediately out of Indifference; and this implies that it can't be from foregoing Choice, which is foregoing Preponderation: if it be not habitual, but occasional, yet if it causes the Act, it is truly previous, efficacious and determining. And yet, at the same Time, 'tis essential to their Notion of an Act, that it is what the Agent is the Author of freely and voluntarily, and that is, by previous Choice and Design.

So that according to their Notion of an Act, confidered with Regard to it's Confequences, these following Things are all effential to it; viz. That it should be necessary, and not necessary; that it should be from a Cause, and no Cause; that it fhould be the Fruit of Choice and Defign, and not the Fruit of Choice and Defign; that it should be the Beginning of Motion or Exertion, and yet confequent on previous Exertion; that it should be before it is; that it should spring immediately - out of Indifference and Equilib.ium, and yet be the Effect of Preponderation; that it should be felf-originated, and also have it's Original from fomething else; that it is what the Mind causes it felf, of it's own Will, and can produce or prevent, according to it's Choice or Pleafure, and yet what the Mind has no Power to prevent, it precluding all previous Choice in the Affair.

So that an A&, according to their metaphyfical Notion of it, is fomething of which there is no Idea; 'tis nothing but a Confusion of the Mind, excited by Words without any distinct Meaning, and is an absolute Non-entity; and that in two Respects; (1.) There is nothing in the World that ever was, is, or can be, to answer the Things which 282 The Arminian Notion of Action, Part IV. which must belong to it's Description, according to what they suppose to be effential to it. And (2.) There neither is, nor ever was, nor can be, any Notion or Idea to answer the Word, as they use and explain it. For if we should suppose any fuch Notion, it would many Ways destroy it self. But 'tis impossible, any Idea or Notion should fubfift in the Mind, whose very Nature and Esfence, which constitutes it, destroys it .---- If some learned Philosopher, who had been abroad, in giving an Account of the curious Observations he had made in his Travels, should say, " He had 66 been in Terra del Fuego, and there had feen an "Animal, which he calls by a certain Name, " that begat and brought forth it felf, and yet 66 had a Sire and a Dam distinct from it self; that it had an Appetite, and was hungry before it " had a Being; that his Master, who led him, " and governed him at his Pleasure, was always " governed by him, and driven by him where he " pleased; that when he moved, he always took " a Step before the first Step; that he went with " his Head first, and yet always went Tail fore-" most; and this, tho' he had neither Head nor "Tail:" It would be no Impudence at all, to tell fuch a Traveller, tho' a learned Man, that He himself had no Notion or Idea of such an Animal as he gave an Account of, and never had, nor ever would have.

As the foremention'd Notion of Action is very inconsistent, so it is wholly diverse from the original Meaning of the Word. The more usual Signification of it in vulgar Speech, seems to be some Motion or Exertion of Power, that is voluntary, or that is the Effect of the Will; and is used in the same Sense as doing: And most commonly 'tis used to signify outward Actions. So Thinking is often often distinguish'd from Asting; and Desiring and Willing, from Ding.

Befides this more usual and proper Signification of the Word Action, there are other Ways in which the Word is used that are less proper, which yet have Place in common Speech. Oftentimes 'tis used to fignify some Motion or Alteration in inanimate Things, with Relation to some Object and Effect. So the Spring of a Watch is faid to att upon the Chain and Wheels; the Sun-beams, to act upon Plants and Trees; and the Fire, to act upon Wood. Sometimes the Word is used to fignify Motions, Alterations, and Exertions of Power, which are feen in corporeal Things, confidered absolutely; especially when these Motions feem to arise from some internal Cause which is bidden; so that they have a greater Resemblance of those Motions of our Bodies, which are the Effects of internal Volition, or invisible Exertions of Will. So the Fermentation of Liquor, the Operations of the Loadstone, and of electrical Bodies, are called the Action of these Things. And fometimes the Word Action is used to signify the Exercise of Thought, or of Will and Inclination: fo meditating, loving, hating, inclining, difinclining, chufing and refufing, may be fometimes called acting; tho' more rarely (unless it be by Philosophers and Metaphysicians) than in any of the other Senfes.

But the Word is never used in vulgar Speech in that Sense which Arminian Divines use it in, namely, for the self-determinate Exercise of the Will, or an Exertion of the Soul that arises without any necessary Connection with any Thing foregoing. If a Man does something voluntarily, or as the Effect of his Choice, then in the most pro-

284. The Arminian Notion of Action, Part IV. per Sense, and as the Word is most originally and commonly used, he is said to ast: But whether that Choice or Volition be self-determined, or no, whether it be connected with foregoing habitual Bias, whether it be the certain Effect of the strongest Motive, or some intrinsic Cause, never comes into Consideration in the Meaning of the Word.

And if the Word Action is arbitrarily used by fome Men otherwise, to suit some Scheme of Metaphyfick or Morality, no Argument can reasonably be founded on fuch a Use of this Term, to prove any Thing but their own Pleasure. For Divines and Philosophers strenuously to urge such Arguments, as tho' they were fufficient to support and demonstrate a whole Scheme of moral Philofophy and Divinity, is certainly to erect a mighty Edifice on the Sand, or rather on a Shadow. And tho' it may now perhaps, through Custom, have become natural for 'em to use the Word in this Sense (if that may be called a Sense or Meaning, which is so inconsistent with it self) yet this don't prove that it is agreable to the natural Notions Men have of Things, or that there can be any Thing in the Creation that should answer such a Meaning. And tho' they appeal to Experience, vet the Truth is, that Men are so far from experiencing any fuch Thing, that it is impossible for 'em to have any Conception of it.

If it should be objected, that Assion and Possion are doubtless Words of a contrary Signification; but to suppose that the Agent, in it's Action, is under the Power and Instuence of something intrinsick, is to consound Action and Passion, and make 'em the same thing.

then

I answer, That Action and Passion are doubtless, as they are sometimes used, Words of opposite Signification; but not as signifying opposite Existences, but only opposite Relations. The Words Cause and Effett are Terms of opposite Signification; but nevertheless, if I affert that the same Thing may at the same Time, in different Respects and Relations, be both Cause and Effect, this will not prove that I confound the Terms. The Soul may be both affive and passive in the fame Thing in different Respects, active with Relation to one Thing, and paffive with Relation to another. The Word Paffion when fet in Opposition to Action or rather Activeness, is meerly a relative: it signifies no Effect or Cause, nor any proper Existence; but is the same with Passiveness, or a being passive, or a being acted upon by something. Which is a meer Relation of a Thing to fome Power or Force exerted by fome Cause, producing some Effect in it, or upon it. And Action, when fet properly in Opposition to Passion, Passiveness, is no real Existence; it is not the same with AN Action, but is a meer Relation: 'Tis the Activeness of something on another Thing, being the opposite Relation to the other, viz. a Relation of Power, or Force exerted by some Cause, towards another Thing, which is the Subject of the Effect of that Power. Indeed the Word Action is frequently used to signify something not meerly relative, but more absolute, and a real Existence: as when we fay An Action; when the Word is not used transitively, but absolutely, for some Motion or Exercise of Body or Mind, without any Relation to any Object or Effect: And as used thus, it is not properly the opposite of Passion; which ordinarily fignifies nothing absolute, but meerly the Relation of being affed upon. And therefore if the Word Action be used in the like relative Sense, then Action and Passion are only two contrary Relations. And 'tis no Absurdity to suppose, that contrary Relations may belong to the fame Thing, at the same Time, with respect to different Things. So to suppose, that there are Acts of the Soul by which a Man voluntarily moves, and acts upon Objects, and produces Effects, which yet themfelves are Effects of fomething elfe, and wherein the Soul it felf is the Object of something acting upon, and influencing that, don't at all confound Action and Passion. The Words may nevertheless be properly of opposite Signification: there may be as true and real a Difference between acting and being caused to act, tho' we should suppose the Soul to be both in the fame Volition, as there is between living, and being quicken'd, or made to live. 'Tis no more a Contradiction, to suppose that Action may be the Effect of some other Cause, besides the Agent, or Being that acts, than to suppose that Life may be the Effect of some other Cause, besides the Liver, or the Being that lives, in whom Life is caused to be.

The Thing which has led Men into this inconfiftent Notion of Action, when applied to Volition, as tho' it were effential to this internal Action, that the Agent should be self-determined in it, and that the Will should be the Cause of it, was probably this; that according to the Sense of Mankind, and the common Use of Language it is fo, with respect to Men's external Actions; which are what originally, and according to the vulgar Use and most proper Sense of the Word, are called Actions. Men in these are self directed, felf-determined, and their Wills are the Caufe of the Motions of their Bodies, and the external Things that are done; fo that unlefs Men do 'em voluntarily, and of Choice, and the Action be deterdetermined by their antecedent Volition, it is no Action or Doing of theirs. Hence fome Metaphyficians have been led unwarily, but exceeding abfurdly, to suppose the same concerning Volition it felf, that That also must be determined by the Will; which is to be determined by antecedent Volition, as the Motion of the Body is; not considering the Contradiction it implies.

But 'tis very evident, that in the metaphyfical Distinction between Action and Passion, (tho' long fince become common and the general Vogue) due Care has not been taken to conform Language to the Nature of Things, or to any distinct clear Ideas. As it is in innumerable other Philosophical, Metaphysical Terms, used in these Disputes; which has occasion'd inexpressible Difficulty, Contention, Errour and Confusion.

And thus probably it came to be thought, that Necessity was inconsistent with Action, as these Terms are applied to Volition. First, these Terms Action and Necessity are changed from their original Meaning, as fignifying external voluntary Action, and Constraint, (in which Meaning they are evidently inconfiftent) to fignify quite other Things, viz. Volition it felf, and Certainty of Existence. And when the Change of Signification is made, Care is not taken to make proper Allowances and Abatements for the Difference of Sense; but still the fame Things are unwarily attributed to Action and Necessity, in the new Meaning of the Words, which plainly belonged to 'em in their first Sense; and on this Ground, Maxims are established without any real Foundation, as though they were the most certain Truths, and the most evident Dictates of Reafon.

But however strenuously it is maintain'd, that what is necessary can't be properly called Action, and that a necessary Action is a Contradiction, yet 'tis probable there are few Arminian Divines, who if thoroughly tried, would stand to these Principles. They will allow, that God is in the highest Sense an active Being, and the highest Fountain of Life and Action; and they would not probably deny, that those that are called God's Acts of Righteousness, Holiness and Faithfulness, are truly and properly God's Ass, and God is really a holy Agent in them; and yet I trust, they will not deny, that God necessarily acts justly and faithfully, and that it is impossible for Him to act unrighteously and unholily.

SECTION III.

The Reasons why some think it contrary to common Sense, to suppose those Things which are necessary, to be worthy of either Praise or Blame.

IS abundantly affirmed and urged by Arminian Writers, that it is contrary to common Sense, and the natural Notions and Apprehensions of Mankind, to suppose otherwise than that Necessity (making no Distinction between natural and moral Necessity) is inconsistent with Vertue and Vice, Praise and Blame, Reward and Punishment. And their Arguments from hence have been greatly triumphed in; and have been not a little perplexing to many who have been friendly to the Truth, as clearly revealed in the holy Scriptures: It has seem'd to them indeed difficult, to reconcile Calvinishic Doctrines with the Notions Men commonly have of Justice and Equity. And Sect. III. contrary to common Sense. 289 the true Reasons of it seem to be these that follow.

I. 'Tis indeed a very plain Dictate of common Sense, that natural Necessity is wholly inconsistent with just Praise or Blame. If Men do Things which in themselves are very good, fit to be brought to pais, and very happy Effects, properly against their Wills, and can't help it; or do them from a Necessity that is without their Wills, or with which their Wills have no Concern or Connection; then 'tis a plain Dictate of common Sense, that it's none of their Vertue, nor any moral Good in them; and that they are not worthy to be rewarded or praifed; or at all esteemed, honoured or loved on that Account. And on the other Hand, that if from like Necessity they do those Things which in Themselves are very unhappy and pernicious, and do them because they can't help it; the Necessity is fuch, that it is all one whether they will them, or no; and the Reafon why they are done, is from Necessity only, and not from their Wills; 'Tis a very plain Dictate of common Sense that they are not at all to blame; there is no Vice, Fault, or moral Evil at all in the Effect done; nor are they who are thus necessitated, in any wife worthy to be punished, hated, or in the least difrespected, on that Account.

In like Manner, if Things in themselves good and desirable are absolutely impossible, with a natural Impossibility, the universal Reason of Mankind teaches, that this wholly and perfectly excuses Persons in their not doing them.

And 'tis also a plain Dictate of common Sense, that if the doing Things in themselves Good, or U avoid-avoiding Things in themselves Evil, is not absolutely impossible, with such a natural Impossibility, but very difficult, with a natural Difficulty; that is, a Difficulty prior to, and not at all confifting in Will and Inclination it felf, and which would remain the same, let the Inclination be what it will; then a Person's Neglect or Omission is excufed in some Measure, tho' not wholly; his Sin is less aggravated, than if the Thing to be done were eafy. And if instead of Difficulty and Hindrance, there be a contrary natural Propenfity in the State of Things, to the Thing to be done, or Effect to be brought to pass, abstracted from any Conside. ration of the Inclination of the Heart; though the Propenfity be not fo great as to amount to a natural Necessity; yet being some Approach to it, fo that the doing the good Thing be very much from this natural Tendency in the State of Things, and but little from a good Inclination; then it is a Dictate of common Sense, that there is so much the less Vertue in what is done; and so it is less Praise-worthy and rewardable. The Reason is eafy, viz. because such a natural Propensity or Tendency is an Approach to natural Necessity; and the greater the Propensity, still so much the nearer is the Approach to Necessity. And therefore as natural Necessity takes away or shuts out all Vertue, fo this Propenfity approaches to an Abolition of Vertue; that is, it diminishes it. And on the other Hand, natural Difficulty in the State of Things is an Approach to natural Imposibility. And as the latter, when it is compleat and absolute, wholly takes away Blame; fo fuch Difficulty takes away some Blame, or diminishes Blame; and makes the Thing done to be less worthy of Punishment.

II. Men in their first Use of such Phrases as these, Must, can't, can't belp it, can't avoid it, necessary, unable, impossible, unavoidable, irresistible &c. use them to fignify a Necessity of Constraint or Restraint, a natural Necessity or Impossibility; or fome Necessity that the Will has nothing to do in: which may be, whether Men will or no; and which may be supposed to be just the same, let Men's Inclinations and Defires be what they will. Such Kind of Terms in their original Use, I suppofe among all Nations, are relative; carrying in their Signification (as was before observed) a Reference or Respect to some contrary Will, Defire or Endeavour, which, it is supposed, is, or may be in the Case. All Men find, and begin to find in early Childhood, that there are innumerable Things that can't be done, which they defire to do; and innumerable Things which they are averse to, that must be, they can't avoid them, they will be, whether they chuse them or no. 'Tis to exprefs this Necessity, which Men fo foon and fo often find, and which fo greatly and fo early affects them in innumerable Cases, that such Terms and Phrases are first formed; and 'tis to signify fuch a Necessity, that they are first used, and that they are most constantly used, in the common Affairs of Life; and not to fignify any fuch metaphyfical, speculative and abstract Notion, that Connection in the Nature or Course of Things, which is between the Subject and Predicate of a Proposition, and which is the Foundation of the certain Truth of that Proposition; to fignify which, they who employ themselves in Philosophical Inquiries into the first Origin and Metaphyfical Relations and Dependences of Things, have borrowed these Terms, for want of others. But we grow up from our Cradles in a Use of such Terms and Phrases, entirely different from this, U_{2} and carrying a Sense exceeding diverse from that in which they are commonly used in the Controversy between Arminians and Calvinists. And it being, as was said before, a Dictate of the universal Sense of Mankind, evident to us as soon as we begin to think, that the Necessity signified by these Terms, in the Sense in which we first learn them, does excuse Persons, and free them from all Fault or Blame; Hence our Idea's of Excusableness or Faultlesness is tied to these Terms and Phrases by a strong Habit, which is begun in Childhood as soon as we begin to speak, and grows up with us, and is strengthned by constant Use and Custom, the Connection growing stronger and stronger.

The habitual Connection which is in Men's Minds between Blamelefness and those foremention'd Terms, Must, cannot, unable, necessary, impeffible, unavoidable, &c. becomes very firong; because as soon as ever Men begin to use Reason and Speech, they have Occasion to excuse themselves, from the natural Necessity fignified by these Terms, in numerous Instances. - I can't do it --- I could not kelp it. And all Mankind have conftant and daily Occasion to use such Phrases in this Sense, to excuse themselves and others in almost all the Concerns of Life, with Respect to Disappointments, and Things that happen which concern and affect us and others, that are hurtful, or difagreeable to us or them, or Things defirable that we or others fail of.

That a being accustomed to an Union of different Ideas, from early Childhood, makes the habitual Connection exceeding strong, as the fuch Connection were owing to Nature, is manifest in tummerable Instances. It is altogether by such an habitual Connection of Ideas, that Men judge of the Bigness or Distance of the Objects of Sight from their Appearance. Thus 'tis owing to fuch a Connection early established, and growing up with a Person, that he judges a Mountain, which he sees at ten Miles distance, to be bigger than his Nose, or further off than the End of it. Having been used so long to join a considerable Distance and Magnitude with fuch an Appearance, Men imagine it is by a Dictate of natural Sense: Whereas it would be quite otherwife with one that had his Eyes newly opened, who had been born blind: He would have the fame vifible Appearance, but natural Sense would dictate no such Thing concerning the Magnitude or Distance of what appeared.

III. When Men, after they had been so habituated to connect Ideas of Innocency or Blamelesness with fuch Terms, that the Union feems to be the Effect of meer Nature, come to hear the same Terms used, and learn to use them themselves in the foremention'd new and metaphyfical Sense, to fignify quite another Sort of Necessity, which has no fuch Kind of Relation to a contrary supposable Will and Endeavour; the Notion of plain and manifest Blamelesness, by this Means, is by a ftrong Prejudice, infenfibly and unwarily transfer'd to a Cafe to which it by no Means belongs: The Change of the Use of the Terms, to a Signification which is very diverfe, not being taken Notice of, or adverted to. And there are feveral Reasons why it is not.

1. The Terms, as used by Philosophers, are not very diftinct and clear in their Meaning: few use them in a fix'd determined Sense. On the contrary, their Meaning is very vague and confused. Which is what commonly happens to the U 3 Words Words used to signify Things intellectual and moral, and to express what Mr. Locke calls mixt Modes. If Men had a clear and distinct understanding of what is intended by these metaphysical Terms, they would be able more easily to compare them with their original and common Sense; and so would not be so easily cheated by them. The Minds of Men are so easily led into Delusion by no Sort of Terms in the World, as by Words of this Sort.

2. The Change of the Signification of the Terms is the more infenfible, because the Things fignified, tho' indeed very different, yet do in fome generals agree. In Necessity, that which is vulgarly to called, there is a strong Connection between the Thing said to be necessary, and something antecedent to it, in the Order of Nature; so there is also in philosophical Necessity. And the in both Kinds of Necessity, the Connection can't be called by that Name, with Relation to an opposite Will or Endeavour, to which it is superiour; which is the Case in vulgar Necessity; yet in both, the Connection is prior to Will and Endeavour, and fo in some Respect superiour. In both Kinds of Necessity there is a Foundation for some Certainty of the Proposition that affirms the Event .--- The Terms used being the same, and the Things signified agreeing in these and some other general Circumstances, and the Expressions as used by Philosophers being not well defined, and so of obfoure and loofe Signification; hence Persons are not aware of the great Difference; and the Nooons of Innocence or Faultleiness, which were so strongly affeciated with them, and were strictly united in their Minds, ever fince they can remember, remain united with them still, as if the Union were altogether natural and necoffary; and they that that go about to make a Separation, feem to them to do great Violence even to Nature it felf.

IV. Another Reason why it appears difficult to reconcile it with Reason, that Men should be blamed for that which is necessary with a moral Necessity (which as was observed before is a Species of Philosophical Necessity) is, that for want of due Confideration, Men inwardly entertain that Apprehension, that this Necessity may be against Men's Wills and sincere Endeavours. They go away Wills and fincere Endeavours. with that Notion, that Men may truly will and wish and strive that it may be otherwise; but that invincible Necessity stands in the Way. And many think thus concerning themselves: some that are wicked Men think they wish that they were good, that they loved God and Holiness; but yet don't find that their Wishes produce the Effect.---The Reasons why Men think, are as follows. (1.) They find what may be called an indirect Willingness to have a better Will, in the Manner before observed. For it is impossible, and a Contradiction to suppose the Will to be directly and properly against it felf. And they don't confider, that this indirect Willingness is entirely a different Thing from properly willing the Thing that is the Duty and Vertue required; and that there is no Vertue in that fort of Willingness which they have. They don't confider, that the Volitions which a wicked Man may have that he loved God, are no Acts of the Will at all against the moral Evil of not loving God; but only fome difagreable Confequences. But the making the requisite Distinction requires more Care of Reflection and Thought than most Men are used to. And Men thro' a Prejudice in their own Favour, are disposed to think well of their own Defires and Dispositions, and to account 'em good and vertuous, tho' their Respect to Ver-U 1 tue tue be only indirest and remote, and 'tis nothing at all that is vertuous that truly excites or terminates their Inclinations. (2.) Another Thing that infenfibly leads and beguiles Men into a Supposition that this moral Necessity or Impossibility is, or may be against Men's Wills, and true Endeavours, is the Derivation and Formation of the Terms themselves, that are often used to express it, which is fuch as feems directly to point to, and holds this forth. Such Words, for Instance, as unable, unavoidable, impossible, irrefistible; which carry a plain Reference to a supposable Power exerted, Endeavours used, Resistance made, in Oppolition to the Necessity: And the Persons that hear them, not confidering nor suspecting but that they are used in their proper Scote: That Sense being therefore understood, there does naturally, and as it were necessarily arise in their Minds a Supposition that it may be so indeed, that true Defires and Endeavours may take Place, but that invincible Necessity stands in the Way, and renders 'em vain and to no Effect.

V. Another Thing which makes Persons more ready to suppose it to be contrary to Reason, that Men should be exposed to the Punishments threaten'd to Sin, for doing those Things which are morally necessary, or not doing those Things morally impossible, is, that Imagination strengthens the Argument, and adds greatly to the Power and Influence of the feeming Reasons against it, from the Greatness of that Punishment. To allow that they may be justive exposed to a small Punishment, would not be so difficult. Whereas, if there were any good Reason in the Case, if it were truly a Distate of Reason that such Necessity was inconfiftent with Faultineis, or just Punishment, the Demonstration would be equally certain with refptet

Sect. IV. contrary to common Sense.

fpect to a finall Punishment, or any Punishment at all, as a very great one: But it is not equally easy to the Imagination. They that argue against the Justice of damning Men for those Things that are thus necessary, seem to make their Argument the stronger, by setting forth the Greatness of the Punishment in strong Expressions: -- That a Man should be cast into eternal Burnings, that he should be made to fry in Hell to all Eternity, for those Things which He had no Power to avoid, and was under a statel, unfrustrable, invincible Necessity of doing.---

SECTION IV.

It is agreable to common Sense, and the natural Notions of Mankind, to suppose moral Necessity to be consistent with Praise and Blame, Reward and Punishment.

MIHETHER the Reasons that have been given, why it appears difficult to fome Persons to reconcile with common Sense the praifing or blaming, rewarding or punishing those Things which are morally necessary, are thought fatisfactory, or not; yet it most evidently appears by the following Things, that if this Matter be rightly understood, setting aside all Delusion arifing from the Impropriety and Ambiguity of Terms, this is not at all inconfishent with the natural Apprehensions of Mankind, and that Sense of Things which is found every where in the common People, who are furthest from having their Thoughts perverted from their natural Channel, by metaphyfical and philosophical Subtilties; but on the contrary, altogether agreable te, and the 298 Necessary Vertue, &c. Part IV. very Voice and Dictate of this natural and vulgar Sense.

I. This will appear if we consider what the vulgar Notion of Blame-worthiness is. The Idea which the common People through all Ages and Nations have of Faultiness, I suppose to be plainly this; A Person's being or doing wrong, with his own Will and Pleasure; containing these two Things; 1. His doing wrong, when he does as he pleases. 2. His Pleasure's being wrong. Or in other Words, perhaps more intelligibly expressing their Notion; A Person's having his Heart wrong, and doing wrong from his Heart. And this is the Sum total of the Matter.

The common People don't ascend up in their Reflections and Abstractions, to the metaphysical Sources, Relations and Dependences of Things, in order to form their Notion of Faultiness or Blame-worthinefs. They don't wait till they have decided by their Refinings, what first determines the Will; whether it be determined by fomething extrinsic, or intrinsic; whether Volition determines Volition, or whether the Understanding determines the Will; whether there be any fuch Thing as Metaphyficians mean by Contingence (if they have any Meaning;) whether there be a Sort of a strange unaccountable Sovereignty in the Will, in the Exercise of which, by it's own sovereign Acts, it brings to pass all it's own sovereign Acts. They don't take any Part of their Notion of Fault or Blame from the Refolution of any fuch Questions. If this were the Case, there are Multitudes, yea the far greater Part of Mankind, nine Hundred and ninety-nine out of a Thousand would live and die without having any fuch Notion as that of Fault ever entring into their Heads, or without fo much as once having any Conception that any Body was to be either blamed or commended for any Thing. To be fure, it would be a long Time before Men came to have fuch Notions. Whereas 'tis manifest, they are some of the first Notions that appear in Children; who discover as soon as they can think, or speak, or act at all as rational Creatures, a Sense of Desert. And certainly, in forming their Notion of it, they make no use of Metaphysicks. All the Ground they go upon confifts in these two Things; Experience, and a natural Sensation of a certain Fitness or Agreableness which there is in uniting such moral Evil as is above described, viz. a being or doing wrong with the Will, and Refentment in others, and Pain inflicted on the Person in whom this moral Evil is. Which natural Sense is what we call by the Name of Conscience.

'Tis true, the common People and Children, in their Notion of any faulty Act or Deed of any Person, do suppose that it is the Person's own All and Deed. But this is all that belongs to what they understand by a Thing's being a Person's own Deed or Action; even that it is fomething done by him of Choice. That some Exercise or Motion should begin of it self don't belong to their Notion of an Action, or Doing. If fo, it would belong to their Notion of it, that it is fomething which is the Cause of it's own Beginning: And that is as much as to fay, that it is before it begins to be. Nor is their Notion of an Action fome Motion or Exercise that begins accidentally, without any Caufe or Reason; for that is contrary to one of the prime Dictates of common Sense, namely, that every Thing that begins to be, has fome Caufe or Reafon why it is.

The common People, in their Notion of a faulty or praife-worthy Deed or Work done by any one, do suppose that the Man does it in the Exercise of Liberty. But then their Notion of Liberty is only a Person's having Opportunity of doing as he pleases. They have no Notion of Liberty confifting in the Will's first acting, and fo caufing it's own Acts; and determining, and fo causing it's own Determinations; or chusing, and fo caufing it's own Choice. Such a Notion of Liberty is what none have, but those that have darken'd their own Minds with confused metaphyfical Speculation, and abstruse and ambiguous Terms. If a Man is not restrain'd from acting as his Will determines, or constrain'd to otherwife; then he has Liberty, according to common Notions of Liberty, without taking into the Idea that grand Contradiction of all, the Determinations of a Man's free Will being the Effects of the Determinations of his free Will.----Nor have Men commonly any Notion of Freedom confisting in Indifference. For if so, then it would be agreable to their Notion, that the greater Indifference Men act with, the more Freedom they act with; whereas the Reverse is true. He that in acting, proceeds with the fullest Inclination, does what He does with the greatest Freedom, according to common Sense. And so far is it from being agreable to common Sense, that such Liberty as confifts in Indifference is requifite to Praife or Blame, that on the contrary, the Dictate of every Man's natural Sense thro' the World is, that the further he is from being indifferent in his acting Good or Evil, and the more he does either with full and strong Inclination, the more is he effectmed or abhorred, commended or condemned.

II. If it were inconfistent with the common Sense of Mankind, that Men should be either to be blamed or commended in any Volitions they have or fail of, in Cafe of moral Necessity or Impossibility; then it would furely also be agreable to the same Sense and Reason of Mankind, that the nearer the Case approaches to such a moral Necessity or Impossibility, either through a strong antecedent moral Propenfity on the one Hand, * or a great antecedent Opposition and Difficulty on the other, the nearer does it approach to a being neither blameable nor commendable; so that Acts exerted with fuch preceeding Propenfity would be worthy of proportionably lefs Praife; and when omitted, the Act being attended with fuch Difficulty, the Omission would be worthy of the less Blame. It is fo, as was observed before, with natural Necessity and Impossibility, Propensity and Difficulty: As 'tis a plain Dictate of the Sense of all Mankind, that natural Necessity and Impossibility takes away all Blame and Praise; and therefore, that the nearer the Approach is to thefe through previous Propenfity or Difficulty, fo Praise and Blame are proportionably diminished. And if it were as much a Dictate of common Sense, that moral Necessity of doing, or Impossibility of avoiding, takes away all Praise and Blame, as that natural Necessity or Impossibility does this; then, by a perfect Parity of Reason, it would be as much the Dictate of common Sense, that an Approach to moral Necessity of doing, or Impossibility of avoiding, diminishes Praise and Blame, as that an Approach to natural Neceffity and Impossibility does fo. 'Tis equally the Voice of common Sense, that Persons are excutable ^{* &#}x27;Tis here argued, on Supposition that not all Propensity implies moral Necessity, but only some very high Degree; which none will deny.

in Part, in neglecting Things difficult against their Wills, as that they are excusable wholly in neglecting Things impossible against their Wills. And if it made no Difference, whether the Impossibility were natural and against the Will, or moral, lying in the Will, with regard to Excuseableness; so neither would it make any Difference, whether the Difficulty, or Approach to Necessity be natural against the Will, or moral, lying in the Propensity of the Will.

But 'tis apparent, that the Reverse of these Things is true. If there be an Approach to a moral Necessity in a Man's Exertion of good Acts of Will, they being the Exercise of a strong Propenfity to Good, and a very powerful Love to Vertue; 'tis so far from being the Dictate of common Sense, that He is less vertuous, and the less to be esteem'd, loved and praised; that 'tis agreable to the natural Notions of all Mankind that he is fo much the better Man, worthy of greater Respect, and higher Commendation. And the stronger the Inclination is, and the nearer it approaches to Necessity in that Respect; or to Impossibility of neglecting the vertuous Act, or of doing a vicious one; still the more vertuous, and worthy of higher Commendation. And on the other Hand, if a Man exerts evil Acts of Mind; as for Instance, Acts of Pride or Malice from a rooted and strong Habit or Principle of Haughtiness and Maliciousness, and a violent Propensity of Heart to such Acts; according to the natural Sense of Men, he is so far from being the less hateful and blameable on that Account, that he is fo much the more worthy to be detelled and condemned by all that observe Him.

Moreover, 'tis manifest that it is no Part of the Notion which Mankind commonly have of a blameable or praise-worthy Act of the Will, that it is an Act which is not determined by an antecedent Bias or Motive, but by the fovereign Power of the Will it felf; because if so, the greater Hand fuch Causes have in determining any Acts of the Will, so much the less vertuous or vicious would they be accounted; and the less Hand, the more vertuous or vicious. Whereas the Reverse is true: Men don't think a good Act to be the less praise-worthy, for the Agent's being much determined in it by a good Inclination or a good Motive; but the more. And if good Inclination or Motive has but little Influence in determining the Agent, they don't think his Act fo much the more vertuous, but the lefs. And fo concerning evil Acts, which are determined by evil Motives or Inclinations.

Yea, if it be supposed that good or evil Dispositions are implanted in the Hearts of Men by Nature it self (which, it is certain, is vulgarly supposed in innumerable Cases) yet it is not commonly supposed that Men are worthy of no Praise or Dispraise for such Dispositions; altho' what is natural is undoubtedly necessary, Nature being prior to all Acts of the Will whatfoever. Thus for Instance, if a Man appears to be of a very haughty or malicious Disposition, and is supposed to be so by his natural Temper, 'tis no vulgar Notion, no Dictate of the common Sense and Apprehension of Men, that such Dispositions are no Vices or moral Evils, or that fuch Persons are not worthy of Difesteem, Odium and Dishonour; or that the proud or malicious Acts which flow from fuch natural Dispositions, are worthy of no Refentment. Yea, fuch vile natural Dispositions, and the Strength of 'em, will commonly be mention'd rather as an Aggravation of the wicked Acts that come from fuch a Fountain, than an Extenuation of 'em. It's being natural for Men to act thus, is often observed by Men in the Height of their Indignation: They will fay, "' 'I'is his very Nature: He is of a vile natural "Temper; 'tis as natural to Him to act fo, as it " is to breathe; He can't help ferving the Devil, " &c." But it is not thus with Regard to hurtful mischievous Things that any are the Subjects or Occasions of by natural Necessity, against their Inclinations. In fuch a Case, the Necessity, by the common Voice of Mankind, will be fpoken of as a full Excuse .- -- Thus 'tis very plain, that common Sense makes a vast Difference between these two Kinds of Necessity, as to the Judgment it makes of their Influence on the moral Quality and Defert of Men's Actions.

And these Dictates of Men's Minds are so natural and necessary, that it may be very much doubted whether the Arminians themselves have ever got rid of 'em; yea, their greatest Doctors, that have gone furthest in Defence of their metaphyfical Notions of Liberty, and have brought their Arguments to their greatest Strength, and as they suppose to a Demonstration, against the Confidence of Vertue and Vice with any Necessity: 'Tis to be question'd, whether there is so much as one of them, but that if He suffered very much from the injurious Acts of a Man under the Power of an invincible Haughtiness and Malignancy of Temper, would not, from the foremention'd natural Sense of Mind, resent it sar otherwife, than if as great Sufferings came upon Him from the Wind that blows, and Fire that burns by natural Necessity; and otherwise than he would. Sect. IV: agreable to common Sense. 305 would, if he suffered as much from the Conduct of a Man perfectly delirious; yea, tho' he first brought his Distraction upon Him some Way by his own Fault.

Some feem to disdain the Distinction that we make between natural and moral Necessity, as tho' it were altogether impertinent in this Controverfy: "That which is necessary (fay they) is necessary; " it is that which must be, and can't be prevent-" ed. And that which is impossible, is impossible, and can't be done: and therefore none can " be to blame for not doing it." And fuch Comparisons are made use of, as the commanding of a Man to walk who has lost his Legs, and condemning and punishing Him for not obeying; Inviting and calling upon a Man, who is shut up in a strong Prison, to come forth, &c. But in these Things Arminians are very unreasonable. Let common Sense determine whether there be not a great Difference between those two Cases; the one, that of a Man who has offended his Prince, and is cast into Prison; and after he has lain there a while, the King comes to him, calls him to come forth to Him; and tells him that if he will do fo, and will fall down before Him, and humb'y beg his Pardon, he shall be forgiven, and fet at Liberty, and also be greatly enrich'd, and advanced to Honour: The Prisoner heartily repents of the Folly and Wickedness of his Offence against his Prince, is thoroughly disposed to abase Himself, and accept of the King's Offer; but is confined by strong Walls, with Gates of Brass, and Barrs of Iron. The other Case is, that of a Man who is of a very unreasonable Spirit, of a haughty, ungrateful, wilful Disposition; and moreover, has been brought up in traiterous Principles; and has his Heart poffesfed with an extream and inveterate Enmity to his lawful Sovereign; and for his Rebellion is cast into Prison, and lies long there, loaden with heavy Chains, and in miserable Circumstances. At length the compassionate Prince comes to the Prison, orders his Chains to be knocked off, and his Prifon-Doors to be fet wide open; calls to him, and tells Him, if He will come forth to him, and fall down before him, acknowledge that he has treated him unworthily, and ask his Forgiveness; He shall be forgiven, set at Liberty, and set in a Place of great Dignity and Profit in his Court. But He is so stout and stomachful, and full of haughty Malignity, that He can't be willing to accept the Offer: his rooted strong Pride and Malice have perfect Power over him, and as it were bind him, by binding his Heart: The Opposition of his Heart has the Mastery over Him, having an Influence on his Mind far superiour to the King's Grace and Condescension, and to all his kind Offers and Promifes. Now, is it agreable to common Sense, to affert and stand to it, that there is no Difference between these two Cases, as to any Worthiness of Blame in the Priioners; because, forsooth, there is a Necessity in both, and the required act in each Case is imposfible? 'Tis true, a Man's evil Dispositions may be as strong and immoveable as the Bars of a Castle. But who can't see, that when a Man, in the latter Case, is faid to be unable to obey the Command, the Expression is used improperly, and not in the Sense it has originally and in common Speech? And that it may properly be faid to be in the Rebel's Power to come out of Prison, seeing he can easily do it if he pleases; tho' by Reafon of his vile Temper of Heart which is fix'd and rooted, 'tis impossible that it should please Him?

Upon the whole, I prefume there is no Person of good Understanding, who impartially confiders the Things which have been observed, but will allow that 'tis not evident from the Dictates of the common Sense, or natural Notions of Mankind, that moral Necessity is inconsistent with Praise and Blame. And therefore, if the Arminians would prove any such Inconsistency, it must be by some philosophical and metaphysical Arguments, and not common Sense.

There is a grand Illusion in the pretended Demonstration of Arminians from common Sense. The main Strength of all these Demonstrations, lies in that Prejudice that arifes thro' the infensible Change of the Use and Meaning of such Terms as Liberty, able, unable, necessary, impossible, unavoidable, invincible, AElion, &c. from their original and vulgar Sense, to a metaphysical Sense entirely diverfe; and the strong Connection of the Ideas of Blamelesness, &c. with some of these Terms, by an Habit contracted and establish'd, while these Terms were used in their first Meaning. This Prejudice and Delufion is the Foundation of all those Positions they lay down as Maxims, by which most of the Scriptures, which they alledge in this Controverfy, are interpreted, and on which all their pompous Demonstrations from Scripture and Reason depend. From this secret Delufion and Prejudice they have almost all their Advantages: 'Tis the Strength of their Bulwarks, and the Edge of their Weapons. And this is the main Ground of all the Right they have to treat their Neighbours in fo affurning a Manner, and to infult others, perhaps as wife and good as themselves, as weak Bigets, Men that dwell in the dark Caves of Superstition, perversly set, obstinately shutting their Eyes against the Noon-day Light, Enemies Calvinism consistent, &c. Part IV. mies to common Sense, maintaining the first-born of Absurdities, &c. &c. But perhaps an impartial Consideration of the Things which have been observed in the preceeding Parts of this Enquiry, may enable the Lovers of Truth better to judge whose Doctrine is indeed absurd, abstruse, self-contradictory, and inconsistent with common Sense, and many Ways repugnant to the universal Dictates of the Reason of Mankind.

Corol. From Things which have been observed, it will follow, that it is agreable to common Sense to suppose, that the glorified Saints have not their Freedom at all diminish'd, in any Respect; and that God Himself has the highest possible Freedom, according to the true and proper Meaning of the Term; and that He is in the highest possible respect an Agent, and active in the Exercise of his infinite Holiness; tho' He acts therein in the highest Degree necessarily: and his Actions of this Kind are in the highest, most absolutely perfect Manner vertuous and praise-worthy; and are so, for that very Reason, because they are most perfectly necessary.

SECTION V.

Concerning those Objections, that this Scheme of Necessity renders all Means and Endeavours for the avoiding of Sin, or the obtaining Vertue and Holiness, vain, and to no Purpose; and that it makes Men no more than meer Machines in Affairs of Morality and Religion.

Arminians fay, if it be so, that Sin and Vertue come to pass by a Necessity consisting in a sure Connection of Causes and Effects, Antecedents and Consequents, it can never be worth the while to use any Means or Endeavours to obtain the one, and avoid the other; seeing no Endeavours can alter the Futurity of the Event, which is become necessary by a Connection already established.

But I desire, that this Matter may be fully confidered; and that it may be examined with a thorough Strictness, whether it will follow that Endeavours and Means, in order to avoid or obtain any future Thing, must be more in vain, on the Supposition of such a Connection of Antecedents and Consequents, than if the contrary be supposed.

For Endeavours to be in vain, is for 'em not to be fuccessful; that is to say, for 'em not eventually to be the Means of the Thing aimed at, which can't be, but in one of these two Ways; either, First, That although the Means are used, yet the Event aimed at don't follow: Or, Secondly, Endeavours not rendered vain, Part IV. If the Event does follow, it is not because of the Means, or from any Connection or Dependence of the Event on the Means, the Event would have come to pass, as well without the Means, as with them. If either of these two Things are the Case, then the Means are not properly successful, and are truly in vain. The Successfulness or Unsuccessfulness of Means, in order to an Effect, or their being in vain or not in vain, confifts in those Means being connected, or not connected, with the Effect, in fuch a Manner as this, viz. That the Effect is with the Means, and not without them; or, that the Being of the Effect is, on the one Hand, connected with the Means, and the Want of the Effect, on the other Hand, is connected with the Want of the Means. If there be fuch a Connection as this between Means and End, the Means are not in vain: The more there is of fuch a Connection, the further they are from being in vain; and the less of fuch a Connection, the more they are in vain.

Now therefore the Question to be answered, (in order to determine, whether it follows from this Doctrine of the necessary Connection between foregoing Things, and confequent ones, that Means used in order to any Effect, are more in vain than they would be otherwise) is, Whether it follows from it, that there is less of the forementioned Connection between Means and Effect; that is, Whether on the Supposition of there being a real and true Connection between antecedent Things and consequent ones, there must be less of a Connection between Means and Effect, than on the Supposition of there being no fix'd Connection between antecedent Things and consequent ones: And the very stating of this Question is fufficient to answer it. It must appear to every one that will open his Eyes, that this Question can't be affirmed, without the groffest Absurdity and Inconfistence. Means are foregoing Things, and Effects are following Things: And if there were no Connection between foregoing Things, and following ones, there could be no Connection between Means and End; and fo all Means would be wholly vain and fruitless. For 'tis by Vertue of fome Connection only, that they become fuccessful: 'Tis some Connection observed, or revealed, or otherwife known, between antecedent Things and following ones, that is what directs in the Choice of Means. And if there were no fuch Thing as an establish'd Connection, there could be no Choice, as to Means; one Thing would have no more Tendency to an Effect, than another; there would be no fuch Thing as Tendency in the Case. All those Things which are fuccessful Means of other Things, do therein prove connected Antecedents of them: And therefore to affert, that a fix'd Connection between Antecedents and Confequents makes Means vain and useless, or stands in the Way to hinder the Connection between Means and End, is just fo ridiculous, as to fay, that a Connection between Antecedents and Confequents stands in the Way to hinder a Connection between Antecedents and Confequents.

Nor can any supposed Connection of the Succession or Train of Antecedents and Consequents, from the very Beginning of all Things, the Connection being made already sure and necessary, either by establish'd Laws of Nature, or by these together with a Decree of sovereign immediate Interpositions of divine Power, on such and such Occasions, or any other Way (if any other there be;) I say, no such necessary Connection of a Se-

312 Means and Endeavours made vain, Pa. IV. ries of Antecedents and Confequents can in the least tend to hinder, but that the Means we use may belong to the Series; and so may be some of those Antecedents which are connected with the Confequents we aim at, in the establish'd Course of Things. Endeavours which we use, are Things that exist; and therefore they belong to the general Chain of Events; all the Parts of which Chain are supposed to be connected: And fo Endeavours are supposed to be connected with fome Effects, or fome consequent Things or other. And certainly this don't hinder but that the Events they are connected with, may be those which we aim at, and which we chuse, because we judge 'em most likely to have a Connection with those Events, from the establish'd Order and Course of Things which we observe, or from something in divine Revelation.

Let us suppose a real and sure Connection between a Man's having his Eyes open in the clear Day-light, with good Organs of Sight, and Seeing; fo that Seeing is connected with his opening his Eyes, and not feeing with his not opening his Eyes; and also the like Connection between fuch a Man's attempting to open his Eyes, and his actually doing it: The supposed established Connection between these Antecedents and Confequents, let the Connection be never fo fure and necessary, certainly don't prove that it is in vain, for a Man in such Circumstances to attempt to open his Eyes, in order to feeing: His aiming at that Event, and the Use of the Means, being the E fect of his Will, don't break the Connection, or hinder the Success.

So that the Objection we are upon, don't lie against the Doctrine of the Necessity of Events by a Certainty, of Connection and Consequence:

On

On the contrary, it is truly forcible against the Arminian Doctrine of Contingence and Self-determination; which is inconsistent with such a Connection. If there be no Connection between those Events wherein Vertue and Vice consist, and any Thing antecedent; then there is no Connection between these Events and any Means or Endeavours used in order to them: And if so, then those Means must be in vain. The less there is of Connection between foregoing Things and sololowing ones, so much the less there is between Means and End, Endeavours and Success; and in the same Proportion are Means and Endeavours ineffectual and in vain.

It will follow from Arminian Principles, that there is no Degree of Connection between Vertue or Vice, and any foregoing Event or Thing: Or, in other Words, That the Determination of the Existence of Vertue or Vice don't in the least depend on the Influence of any Thing that comes to pass antecedently, from which the Determination of it's Existence is, as it's Cause, Means, or Ground; because, so far as it is so, it is not from Self-determination: And therefore, fo far there is nothing of the Nature of Vertue or Vice. And so it follows, that Vertue and Vice are not at all, in any Degree, dependent upon, or connected with any foregoing Event or Existence, as it's Cause, Ground, or Means. And if so, then all foregoing Means must be totally in vain.

Hence it follows, that there cannot, in any Confistence with the Arminian Scheme, be any reasonable Ground of so much as a Conjecture concerning the Consequence of any Means and Endeavours, in order to escaping Vice or obtaining Vertue, or any Choice or Preserence of Means, 314 Calvinism don't encourage Sloth. Part IV. as having a greater Probability of Success by some than others; either from any natural Connection or Dependence of the End on the Means, or through any divine Constitution, or revealed Way of God's bestowing or bringing to pass these Things, in Consequence of any Means, Endeavours, Prayers or Deeds. Conjecture in this latter Case depends on a Supposition that God himfelf is the Giver, or determining Cause of the Events fought: But if they depend on Self-determination, then God is not the determining or disposing Author of them: And if these Things are not of his Disposal, then no Conjecture can be made from any Revelation he has given concerning any Way or Method of his Disposal of them.

Yea, on these Principles, it will not only follow that Men can't have any reasonable Ground of Judgment or Conjecture, that their Means and Endeavours to obtain Vertue or avoid Vice, will be fuccessful, but they may be fure they will not; they may be certain, that they will be in vain; and that if ever the Thing which they feek comes to pass, it will not be at all owing to the Means they use. For Means and Endeavours can have no Effect at all, in Order to obtain the End, but in one of these two Ways; either (1.) Through a natural Tendency and Influence, to prepare and dispose the Mind more to vertuous Acts, either by causing the Disposition of the Heart to be more in Favour of fuch Acts, or by bringing the Mind more into the View of powerful Motives and Inducements: Or, (2.) By putting Persons more in the Way of God's Bestowment of the Benefit. But neither of these can be the Case. Not the latter; for as has been just now observed, it don't confift with the Arminian Notion of Self-determination, sect. V. Calvinisin don't encourage Sloth. 315 mination, which they suppose essential to Vertue, that God should be the Bestower, or (which is the same Thing) the determining, disposing Author of Vertue. Not the former; for natural Influence and Tendency supposes Causality and Connection; and that supposes Necessity of Event, which is inconsistent with Arminian Liberty. A Tendency of Means, by biassing the Heart in Favour of Vertue, or by bringing the Will under the Insluence and Power of Motives in it's Determinations, are both inconsistent with Arminian Liberty of Will, consisting in Indisference, and sovereign Self-determination, as has been largely demonstrated.

But for the more full Removal of this Prejudice against that Doctrine of Necessity which has been maintain'd, as though it tended to encourage a total Neglect of all Endeavours as vain; the following Things may be considered.

The Question is not, Whether Men may not thus improve this Doctrine: We know that many true and wholesome Doctrines are abused: But. Whether the Doctrine gives any just Occasion for fuch an Improvement; or whether, on the Supposition of the Truth of the Doctrine, such a Use of it would not be unreasonable? If any shall affirm, that it would not, but that the very Nature of the Doctrine is fuch as gives just Occasion for it, it must be on this Supposition; namely, That fuch an invariable Necessity of all Things already fettled, must render the Interposition of all Means, Endeavours, Conclusions or Actions of ours, in order to the obtaining any future End whatfoever, perfectly infignificant; because they can't in the least alter or vary the Course and Series of Things, in any Event or Circumstance;

316 Calvinism den't encourage Sloth. Part IV. all being already fixed unalterably by Necessity: And that therefore 'tis Folly, for Men to use any Means for any End; but their Wisdom, to save themselves the Trouble of Endeavours, and take their Ease. No Person can draw such an Inference from this Doctrine, and come to fuch a Conclusion, without contradicting himself, and going counter to the very Principles he pretends to act upon: For he comes to a Conclusion, and takes a Course, in order to an End, even his Ease, or the faving himself from Trouble; he seeks something future, and uses Means in Order to a future Thing, even in his drawing up that Conclusion, that he will feek nothing, and use no Means in order to any Thing future; he feeks his future Ease, and the Benefit and Comfort of Indolence. If prior Necessity that determines all Things, makes vain all Actions or Conclusions of ours, in order to any Thing future; then it makes vain all Conclusions and Conduct of ours, in order to our future Eafe. The Measure of our Ease, with the Time, Manner and every Circumstance of it, is already fix'd, by all-determining Necessity, as much as Thing else. If he says within himself, "What " future Happiness or Misery I shall have, is al-" ready in Effect determined by the necessary " Course and Connection of Things; therefore I " will fave myself the Trouble of Labour and "Diligence, which can't add to my determin'd " Degree of Happiness, or diminish my Misery; " but will take my Eafe, and will enjoy the Com-" fort of Sloth and Negligence." Such a Man contradicts himself: He says, the Measure of his future Happiness and Misery is already fix'd, and he won't try to diminish the one, nor add to the other: But yet in his very Conclusion, he contradicts this; for he takes up this Conclusion, to add to his future Happiness, by the Ease and Comfort

Se.V. Calvinism don't make Men Machines. 317 fort of his Negligence; and to diminish his future Trouble and Misery, by faving himself the Trouble of using Means and taking Pains.

Therefore Perfons can't reasonably make this Improvement of the Doctrine of Necessity, that they will go into a voluntary Negligence of Means for their own Happiness. For the Principles they must go upon, in order to this, are inconsistent with their making any Improvement at all of the Doctrine: For to make some Improvement of it, is to be influenced by it, to come to some voluntary Conclusion, in Regard to their own Conduct, with some View or Aim: But this, as has been shown, is inconsistent with the Principles they pretend to act upon. In short, the Principles are such as cannot be acted upon at all, or in any Respect, consistently. And therefore in every Pretence of acting upon them, or making any Improvement at all of them, there is a Self-contradiction.

As to that Objection against the Doctrine which I have endeavoured to prove, that it makes Men no more than meer Machines; I would say, that notwithstanding this Doctrine, Man is entirely, perfectly and unspeakably different from a meer Machine, in that he has Reason and Understanding, and has a Faculty of Will, and is so capable of Volition and Choice; and in that, his Will is guided by the Dictates or Views of his Understanding; and in that his external Actions and Behaviour, and in many Respects also his Thoughts, and the Exercises of his Mind, are subject to his Will; so that he has Liberty to act according to his Choice, and do what he pleases; and by Means of these Things, is capable of moral Habits and moral Acts, such Inclinations and Actions as according 318 Calvinism don't make Men Machines. P. IV. cording to the common Sense of Mankind, are worthy of Praise, Esteem, Love and Reward; or on the contrary, of Disesteem, Detestation, Indignation and Punishment.

In these Things is all the Difference from meer Machines, as to Liberty and Agency, that would be any Perfection, Dignity or Privilege, in any Respect: All the Difference that can be desired, and all that can be conceived of; and indeed all that the Pretentions of the Arminians themselves come to, as they are forced often to explain themfelves. (Tho' their Explications overthrow and abolish the Things afferted, and pretended to be explained) For they are forced to explain a felfdetermining Power of Will, by a Power in the Soul, to determine as it chuses or wills; which comes to no more than this, that a Man has a Power of chusing, and in many Instances, can do as he chuses. Which is quite a different Thing from that Contradiction, his having Power of chusing his first Act of Choice in the Case.

Or if their Scheme makes any other Difference than this, between Men and Machines, it is for the worfe: It is fo far from supposing Men to have a Dignity and Privilege above Machines, that it makes the Manner of their being determined still more unhappy. Whereas Machines are guided by an understanding Cause, by the skilful Hand of the Workman or Owner; the Will of Man is left to the Guidance of nothing, but absolute blind Contingence.

SECTION VI.

Concerning that Objection against the Doctrine which has been maintain'd, that it agrees with the Stoical Doctrine of Fate, and the Opinions of Mr. Hobbes.

HEN Calvinifts oppose the Arminian Notion of the Freedom of Will, and Contingence of Volition, and insist that there are no Acts of the Will, nor any other Events whatsoever, but what are attended with some Kind of Necessity; their Opposers cry out of them, as agreeing with the antient Stoicks in their Doctrine of Fate, and with Mr. Hobbes in his Opinion of Necessity.

It would not be worth while to take Notice of fo impertinent an Objection, had it not been urg'd by some of the chief Arminian Writers.—There were many important Truths maintain'd by the antient Greek and Roman Philosophers, and especially the Stoicks, that are never the worfe for being held by them. The Stoic Philosophers, by the general Agreement of Christian Divines, and even Arminian Divines, were the greatest, wifest, and most vertuous of all the Heathen Philosophers; and in their Doctrine and Practice came the nearest to Christianity of any of their Sects. How frequently are the Saying of these Philosophers, in many of the Writings and Sermons, even of Arminian Divines, produced, not as Arguments of the Falseness of the Doctrines which they delivered, but as a Confir-mation of some of the greatest Truths of the Christian Religion, relating to the Unity and Perfections fections of the Godhead, a future State, the Duty and Happiness of Mankind, &c. as observing how the Light of Nature and Reason in the wisest and best of the Heathen, harmonized with, and confirms the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

And it is very remarkable concerning Dr. Whitby, that altho' He alledges the Agreement of the Stoicks with us, wherein He supposes they maintain'd the like Doctrine with us, as an Argument against the Truth of our Doctrine; yet this very Dr. Whithy alledges the Agreement of the Stoicks with the Arminians, wherein he supposes they taught the fame Doctrine with them, as an Argument for the Truth of their Doctrine. * So that when the Stoicks agree with them, this (it feems) is a Confirmation of their Doctrine, and a Confutation of ours, as shewing that our Opinions are contrary to the natural Sense and common Reason of Mankind: Nevertheless, when the Stoicks agree with us, it argues no fuch Thing in our Favour; but on the contrary, is a great Argument against us, and shews our Doctrine to be Heathenish.

It is observed by some Calvinistic Writers, that the Arminians symbolize with the Stoicks, in some of those Doctrines wherein they are opposed by the Calvinists; particularly in their denying an criginal, innate, total Corruption and Depravity of Heart; and in what they held of Man's Ability to make Himself truly vertuous and conformed to God: --- and in some other Doctrines.

It may be further observed, 'tis certainly no better Objection against our Doctrine, that it agrees in some Respects with the Doctrine of the antient antient Stoic Philosophers, than it is against theirs, wherein they differ from us, that it agrees in some Respects with the Opinion of the very worst of the Heathen Philosophers, the Followers of Epicarus, that Father of Atheism and Licentiousness, and with the Doctrine of the Sadducees and Jesuits.

I am not much concerned to know precifely what the antient Stoic Philosophers held concerning Fate, in order to determine what is Truth; as. tho' it were a fure Way to be in the right, to takegood Heed to differ from them. It feems that they differed among themselves; and probably... the Doctrine of Fate, as maintain'd by most of 'em, was in some Respects erroneous. But whatever their Doctrine was, if any of 'em held fuch a Fate, as is repugnant to any Liberty confifting in our doing as we please, I utterly deny such a Fate. If they held any fuch Fate, as is not confiftent with the common and universal Notions that Mankind have of Liberty, Activity, moral Agency, Vertue and Vice; I disclaim any such Thing, and think I have demonstrated that the Scheme I maintain is no fuch Scheme. If the Stoicks by Fate meant any Thing of fuch a Nature, as can be supposed to stand in the Way of the Advantage and Benefit of the Use of Means and Endeavours, or makes it lefs worth the while for Men to defire, and feek after any Thing wherein their Vertue and Happiness consists; I hold no Doctrine that is clog'd with any fuel. Inconvenience, any more than any other Scheine whatfoever; and by no Means fo much as the Arminian Scheme of Contingence; as has been shewn. If they held any fuch Doctrine of univerfal Fatality, as is inconfiftent with any Kind of Liberty, that is or can be any Persection, Dignity, Privilege or Benest, or any Thing defirable, in any Respect, for any any intelligent Creature, or indeed with any Liberty that is possible or conceivable; I embrace no such Doctrine. If they held any such Doctrine of Fate as is inconsistent with the World's being in all Things subject to the Disposal of an intelligent wise Agent, that presides, not as the Soul of the World, but as the sovereign Lord of the Universe, governing all Things by proper Will, Choice and Design, in the Exercise of the most perfect Liberty conceivable, without Subjection to any Constraint, or being properly under the Power or Insluence of any Thing before, above or without himself; I wholly renounce any such Doctrine.

As to Mr. Hobbes's maintaining the fame Doctrine concerning Necessity; --- I confess, it happens I never read Mr. Hobbes. Let his Opinion be what it will, we need not reject all Truth which is demonstrated by clear Evidence, meerly because it was once held by fome bad Man. This great Truth, that Jesus is the Son of God, was not spoil'd because it was once and again proclaimed with a loud Voice by the Devil. If Truth is fo defiled because it is spoken by the Mouth, or written by the Pen of some ill-minded mischievous Man, that it must never be received, we shall never know when we hold any of the most precious and evident Truths by a fure Tenure. And if Mr. Hobbes has made a bad Use of this Truth, that is to be lamented: but the Truth is not to be thought worthy of Rejection on that Account. 'Tis common for the Corruptions of the Hearts of evil Men, to abuse the best Things to vile Purposes.

I might also take Notice of it's having been observed, that the Arminians agree with Mr. Hobbes † in many more Things than the Calvinists. As, in ⁺ Dr. Gill, in his Answer to Dr. Whithy, Vol. III. P. 183, &c.

Sect. VII. Concerning the Necessity, &c. 323 in what he is faid to hold concerning Original Sin, in denying the Necessity of supernatural Illumination, in denying insufed Grace, in denying the Doctrine of Justification by Faith alone; and other Things.

SECTION VII.

Concerning the Necessity of the Divine Will.

OME may possibly object against what has been supposed of the Absurdity and Inconsistence of a felf-determining Power in the Will, and the Impossibility of it's being otherwise, than that the Will should be determined in every Case by fome Motive, and by a Motive which (as it stands in the View of the Understanding) is of superiour Strength to any appearing on the other Side; That if these Things are true, it will follow, that not only the Will of created Minds, but the Will of God Himself is necessary in all it's Determina-Concerning which fays the Author of the Essay on the Freedom of Will in God and in the Creature (Pag. 85, 86.) "What strange Doctrine is "this, contrary to all our Ideas of the Dominion " of God? Does it not destroy the Glory of his " Liberty of Choice, and take away from the " Creator and Governour and Benefactor of the "World, that most free and sovereign Agent, all " the Glory of this Sort of Freedom? Does it " not feem to make Him a Kind of mechanical " Medium of Fate, and introduce Mr. Hobbes's "Doctrine of Fatality and Necessity, into all " Things that God hath to do with? Does it not " feem to represent the blessed God, as a Being " of vait Understanding, as well as Power and " Efficiency, but still to leave Him without a Y = 2

324 Concerning the Necessity Part IV.

"Will to chuse among all the Objects within his "View? In short, it seems to make the blessed

"God a Sort of almighty Minister of Fate, un"der it's univerfal and fupream Influence; as it was the profess'd Sentiment of some of the An-

"tients, that Fate was above the Gods."

This is declaiming, rather than arguing; and an Application to Men's Imaginations and Prejudices, rather than to meer Reason.—But I would calmly endeavour to confider whether there be any Reason in this frightful Representation .--- But before I enter upon a particular Confideration of the Matter, I would observe this: That 'tis reafonable to suppose, it should be much more difficult to express or conceive Things according to exact metaphyfical Truth, relating to the Nature and Manner of the Existence of Things in the divine Understanding and Will, and the Operation of these Faculties (if I may so call them) of the divine Mind, than in the human Mind; which is infinitely more within our View, and nearer to a Proportion to the Measure of our Comprehension, and more commensurate to the Use and Import of human Speech. Language is indeed very deficient, in Regard of Terms to express precise Truth converning our own Minds, and their Faculties and Operations. Words were first formed to express external Things; and those that are applied to express Things internal and spiritual, are almost all borrowed, and used in a Sort of figurative Sense. Whence they are most of 'cm attended with a great Deal of Ambiguity and Unfixedness in their Signification, occasioning innumerable Doubts, Difficulties and Confusions in Enquiries and Controversics about Things of this Nature. But Language is much less adapted to express Things Sect. VII. of the Divine Volition.

Things in the Mind of the incomprehensible Deity, precisely as they are.

We find a great Deal of Difficulty in conceiving exactly of the Nature of our own Souls. And notwithstanding all the Progress which has been made in past and present Ages, in this Kind of Knowledge, whereby our Metaphysicks, as it relates to these Things, is brought to greater Perfection than once it was; yet here is still Work enough left for future Enquiries and Researches, and Room for Progress still to be made, for many Ages and Generations. But we had need to be infinitely able Metaphysicians, to conceive with Clearness, according to strict, proper and perfect Truth, concerning the Nature of the divine Essence, and the Modes of the Action and Operation of the Powers of the divine Mind.

And it may be noted particularly, that tho' we are obliged to conceive of some Things in God as confequent and dependent on others, and of fome Things pertaining to the divine Nature and Will as the Foundation of others, and so before others in the Order of Nature: As, we must conceive of the Knowledge and Holiness of God as prior in the Order of Nature to his Happiness; the Perfection of his Understanding, as the Foundation of his wife Purposes and Decrees; the Holiness of his Nature, as the Cause and Reason of his holy Determinations. And yet when we speak of Cause and Essect, Antecedent and Consequent, fundamental and dependent, determining and demined, in the first Being, who is felf-existent, independent, of perfect and absolute Simplicity and Immutability, and the first Cause of all Things; doubtless there must be less Propriety in such Representations, than when we speak of derived de-Y 2 pendent Necessity of acting most wisely, Part IV. pendent Beings, who are compounded, and liable to perpetual Mutation and Succession.

Having premifed this, I proceed to observe concerning the foremention'd Author's Exclamation, about the necessary Determination of God's Will, in all Things, by what He sees to be fittest and best.

That all the feeming Force of fuch Objections and Exclamations must arise from an Imagination, that there is some Sort of Privilege or Dignity in being without fuch a moral Necessity, as will make it impossible to do any other, than always chuse what is wifest and best; as tho' there were fome Disadvantage, Meanness and Subjection, in fuch a Necessity; a Thing by which the Will was confined, kept under, and held in Servitude by fomething, which, as it were, maintained a ftrong and invincible Power and Dominion over it, by Bonds that held him fast, and that he could by no Means deliver himself from. Whereas, this must be all meer Imagination and Delufion. 'Tis no Disadvantage or Dishonour to a Being, necessarily to act in the most excellent and happy Manner, from the necessary Perfection of his own Nature. This argues no Imperfection, Inferiority or Dependance, nor any Want of Dignity, Privilege or Ascendancy. + 'Tis not inconsistent with the absolute ^{† &}quot;It might have been objected with much more Plaufible"ness, that the supreme Cause cannot be sice, because he must "needs do always what is best in the Whole. But this would "not at all serve Spinoza's Purpose: For this is a Necessity,

"not of Nature and Fate, but of Fitness and Wisdom; a Ne"cessity consistent with the greatest Freedom, and most perfect

"an unalterable Rectitude of Will, and Perfection of Wisdom,

Sect. VII. agreable to most perfect Liberty, 327 absolute, and most perfect Sovereignty of God. The Sovereignty of God is his Ability and Authority to do whatever pleases him; whereby He doth according to his Will in the Armies of Heaven, and amongst the Inhabitants of the Earth, and none can stay his Hand, or say unto him, What dest thou? ---The following Things belong to the Sovereignty of God; viz. (1.) Supreme, univerfal, and infinite Power; whereby he is able to do what he pleafes. without Controul, without any Confinement of that Power, without any Subjection in the least Measure to any other Power; and so without any Hindrance or Restraint, that it should be either impossible, or at all difficult, for him to accomplish his Will; and without any Dependance of his Power on any other Power, from whence it should be derived, or which it should stand in any Need of: So far from this, that all other Power is derived from Him, and is absolutely dependent on Him. (2.) That He has supreme Authority; Y 4 abfolute

" Tho' God is a most perfectly free Agent, yet he cannot " but do always what is best and wifest in the Whole. The " Reason is evident; because perfect Wisdom and Goodness " are as fleady and certain Principles of Action, as Necessity " it felf; and an infinitely wife and good Being, indued with " the most perfect Liberty, can no more chuse to act in Con-" tradiction to Wisdom and Goodness, than a necessary Agent " can act contrary to the Necessity by which it is acted; it " being as great an Absurdity and Impossibility in Choice, for " infinite Wisdom to chuse to act unwifely, or infinite Good-" ness to chuse what is not good, as it would be in Nature, for absolutely Necessity to sail of producing its necessary " Effect. There was indeed no Necessay in Nature, that God " should at first create such Beings as he has created, or indeed " any Being at all; because he is in himself infinitely happy " and All-fufficient. There was also no Necessity in Nature, " that he should preserve and continue Things in Being, after " they were created; because he would be self-sufficient with-" out their Continuance, as he was before their Creation. " But it was fit and wife and good, that infinite Wifdom should absolute and most perfect Right to do what He wills, without Subjection to any fuperiour Authority, or any Derivation of Authority from any other, or Limitation by any distinct independent Authority, either fuperiour, equal, or inferiour; he being the Head of all Dominion, and Fountain of all Authority; and also without Restraint by any Obligation, implying either Subjection, Derivation, or Dependance, or proper Limitation. (3.) That his Will is fupreme, underived, and independent on any Thing without Himfelf; being in every Thing determin'd by his own Counfel, having no other Rule but his own Wisdom; his Will not being subject to, or restrain'd by the Will of any other, and other Wills being perfectly subject to his. (4.) That his Wisdom, which determines his Will, is supreme, perfect, underived, felf-fufficient, and independent; fo that it may be said as in Isai. xl. 14. With whom took He Counsel? the Path of Judgment, and taught Him Knowlege, and shewed Him the Way of Understanding? --- There is no other divine Sovereignty but this: and this is properly absolute Sovereignty: No other is desirable; nor would any other be honourable, or happy: and indeed there is no other conceivable or possible. 'Tis the Glory and Greatness of the divine Sovereignty, that God's Will is determin'd by his own infinite all-sufficient Wisdom in every Thing; and in nothing at all is either directed by any inferiour Wisdom, or by no Wisdom; whereby it would become senseless Arbitrariness, determining and acting without Reason, Design or End.

If God's Will is steadily and surely determined in every Thing by supreme Wisdom, then it is in every Thing necessarily determined to that which is most wise. And certainly it would be a Disadvantage and Indignity, to be otherwise. For if more left at Random, the greater Dignity and Advantage. And consequently to be perfectly free from the Direction of Understanding, and universally and entirely left to senseless unmeaning Contingence, to act absolutely at Random, would be the supreme Glory.

It no more argues any Dependence of God's Will, that his fupremely wife Volition is necessary, than it argues a Dependence of his Being, that his Existence is necessary. If it be something too low, for the supreme Being to have his Will determined by moral Necessity, so as necessarily, in every Case, to will in the highest Degree holily and happily; then why is it not also something too low, for him to have his Existence, and the infinite

" willing, is not to be understood. And to be capable of willing otherwise than what is wifest and best, contradicts "that Knowledge which is infinite. Infinite Knowledge must direct the Will without Error. Here then is the Origin of " moral Necessity; and that is really, of Freedom. - Perhaps it " may be faid, when the divine Will is determined, from the " Confideration of the eternal Aptitudes of Things, it is as " necessarily determined, as if it were physically impel'd, if " that were possible. But it is unskilfulness, to suppose this " an Objection. The great Principle is once established, viz. "That the divine Will is determined by the eternal Reason " and Aptitudes of Things, instead of being physically im-" pelled; and after that, the more strong and necessary this " Determination is, the more perfect the Deity must be al-" lowed to be: It is this that makes him an amiable and " adorable Being, whose Will and Power are constantly, im-" mutably determined, by the Confideration of what is wifelt " and best; instead of a furd Being, with Power, but without " Discerning and Reason. It is the Beauty of this Necessary, " that it is firong as Fate itself, with all the Advantage of Reason " and Goodness .- It is strange, to see Men contend, that the " Deity is not Free, because he is necessarily rational, im-" mutably good and wife; when a Man is allowed still the " perfecter Being, the more fixedly and constantly his Will is " determined by Reason and Truth." Enquiry into the Nature of the Hum, Soul. Edit. 3. Vol. II. P. 203, 404.

Mecessity of acting most wisely, Part IV. finite Persection of his Nature, and his infinite Happiness determined by Necessity? It is no more to God's Dishonour, to be necessarily wise, than to be necessarily holy. And if neither of them be to his Dishonour then it is not to his Dishonour necessarily to act holily and wisely. And is it be not dishonourable, to be necessarily holy and wise, in the highest possible Degree, no more is it mean or dishonourable, necessarily to act holily and wisely in the highest possible Degree; or (which is the same Thing) to do that, in every Case, which above all other Things is wisest and best.

The Reason why it is not dishonourable, to be necessarily most holy, is, because Holiness in it self is an excellent and honourable Thing. For the same Reason, it is no Dishonour to be necessarily most wise, and in every Case to act most wisely, or do the Thing which is the wisest of all; for Wisdom is also in it self excellent and honourable.

The forementioned Author of the Essay on the Freedom of Will, &c. as has been observed, represents that Doctrine of the divine Will's being in every Thing necessarily determined by superior Fitness, as making the blessed God a Kind of almighty Minister and mechanical Medium of Fate: And he insists, P. 93, 94. that this moral Necessity and Impossibility is in Essect the same Thing with physical and natural Necessity and Impossibility: And in P. 54, 55. he says, "The "Scheme which determines the Will always and certainly by the Understanding, and the Un-"derstanding by the Appearance of Things, seems to take away the true Nature of Vice and Vertue. For the sublimest of Vertues, and Sect. VII. no Meanness or Disadvantage 333 "the vilest of Vices, seem rather to be Matters of Fate and Necessity, slowing naturally and necessarily from the Existence, the Circumstances, and present Situation of Persons and Things: For this Existence and Situation necessarily makes such an Appearance to the Mind; from this Appearance slows a necessary

"Perception and Judgment, concerning these Things; this Judgment necessarily determines

"the Will: And thus by this Chain of neces" fary Causes, Vertue and Vice would lose their "Nature, and become natural Ideas, and neces" fary Things, instead of moral and free Ac" tions."

And yet this fame Author allows, P. 30, 31. That a perfectly wife Being will conftantly and certainly chuse what is most fit; and says, P. 102, 103. "I grant, and always have granted, that wherefoever there is such an antecedent superior Fitness of Things, God acts according to it, so fo as never to contradict it; and particularly, in all his judicial Proceedings, as a Governor, and Distributer of Rewards and Punishments." Yea, he says expresly, P. 42. "That it is not possible for God to act otherwise, than according to this Fitness and Goodness in Things."

So that according to this Author, putting these several Passages of this Essay together, there is no Vertue, nor any Thing of a moral Nature, in the most sublime and glorious Acts and Exercises of God's Holiness, Justice, and Faithfulness; and he never does any Thing which is in it self supreamly worthy, and above all other Things sit and excellent, but only as a Kind of mechanical Medium of Fate; and in what he does as the Judge, and meral Governor of the World, The exercises no

334 Necessity of God's acting wisely, &c. P.IV. moral Excellency; exercifing no Freedom in these Things, because He acts by moral Necessity, which is in Effect the same with physical or natural Necessity; and therefore he only acts by an Hobbistical Fatality; as a Being indeed of vast Understanding, as well as Power and Efficiency (as He said before) but without a Will to chuse, being a Kind of almighty Minister of Fate, acting under it's supream Influence. For He allows, that in all these Things God's Will is determined constantly and certainly by a superiour Fitness, and that it is not possible for Him to act otherwise. And if these Things are so, what Glory or Praise belongs to God for doing holily and justly, or taking the most fit, holy, wife and excellent Course, in any one Instance? Whereas, according to the Scriptures, and also the common Sense of Mankind, it don't in the least derogate from the Honour of any Being, that through the moral Perfection of his Nature, he necessarily acts with supream Wisdom and Holiness: But on the contrary, his Praise is the greater: Herein confifts the Height of his Glory.

The fame Author, P. 56. supposes, that herein appears the excellent Character of a wife and good Man, that tho' he can chuse contrary to the Fitness of Things, yet he does not; but suffers himself to be directed by Fitness; and that in this Conduct He imitates the blessed God. And yet He supposes 'tis contrariwise with the blessed God; not that he suffers Himself to be directed by Fitness, when He can chuse contrary to the Fitness of Things, but that he cannot chuse contrary to the Fitness of Things; as he says, P. 42.--That it is not possible for God to act otherwise, than, according to this Fitness, where there is any Fitness or Goodness in Things: Yea, he supposes, P. 31. That if a Man were persectly wise

Se.VIII. Of God's creating the World,&c. 335 and good, he could not do otherwise than he constantly and certainly determined by the Fitness of Things.

One thing more I would observe, before I conclude this Section; and that is, that if it derogates nothing from the Glory of God, to be necessarily determined by superior Fitness in some Things, then neither does it to be thus determined in all Things; from any Thing in the Nature of such Necessity, as at all detracting from God's Freedom, Independence, absolute Supremacy, or any Dignity or Glory of his Nature, State, or Manner of acting; or as implying any Infirmity, Restraint, or Subjection. And if the Thing be such as well consists with God's Glory, and has nothing tending at all to detract from it; then we need not be asraid of ascribing it to God in too many Things, lest thereby we should detract from God's Glory too much.

SECTION VIII.

Some further Objections against the moral Necessity of God's Volitions considered.

HE Author last cited, as has been observed, owns that God, being perfectly wise, will constantly and certainly chuse what appears most sit, where there is a superior Fitness and Goodness in Things; and that it is not possible for him to do otherwise. So that it is in Effect confess'd, that in those Things where there is any real Preferableness, 'tis no Dishonour, nothing in any Respect unworthy of God, for him to act from Necessity; notwithstanding all that can be objected from the Agreement of such a Necessity,

336 Of God's creating the World, Part IV. with the Fate of the Stoicks, and the Necessity maintain'd by Mr. Hobbes. From which it will follow, that if it were fo, that in all the different Things, among which God chuses, there were evermore a superior Fitness or Preferableness on one Side, then it would be no Dishonour, or any Thing, in any Respect, unworthy, or unbecoming of God, for his Will to be necessarily determined in every Thing. And if this be allowed, it is a giving up entirely the Argument, from the Unfuitableness of such a Necessity to the Liberty, Supremacy, Independence and Glory of the divine Being; and a resting the whole Weight of the Affair on the Decision of another Point wholly diverse; viz. Whether it be so inaeed, that in all the various possible Things which are in God's View, and may be confidered as capable Objects of his Choice, there is not evermore a Preferableness in one Thing above another. This is denied by this Author; who supposes, that in many Instances, between two or more possible Things, which come within the View of the divine Mind, there is a perfect Indifference and Equality as to Fitness, or Tendency to attain any good End which God can have in View, or to answer any of his Defigns. Now therefore I would

The Arguments brought to prove this, are of two Kinds. (1.) It is urged, that in many Inftances we must suppose there is absolutely no Difference between various possible Objects of Choice, which God has in View: And (2.) that the Difference between many Things is so inconsiderable, or of such a Nature, that it would be unreasonable to suppose it to be of any Consequence; or to suppose that any of God's wise Designs confider whether this be evident.

Sect. VIII. at fuch a Time and Place. 337 figns would not be answered in one Way as well as the other.

Therefore,

I. The first Thing to be considered is, Whether there are any Instances wherein there is a perfect Likeness, and absolutely no Difference, between different Objects of Choice, that are proposed to the divine Understanding?

And here in the first Place, it may be worthy to be considered, whether the Contradiction there is in the Terms of the Question proposed, don't give Reason to suspect that there is an Inconsistence in the Thing supposed. 'Tis inquired, whether different Objects of Choice mayn't be absolutely without Difference? If they are absolutely without Difference, then how are they different Objects of Choice? If there be absolutely no Difference in any Respect, then there is no Variety or Distinction: For Distinction is only by some Difference. And if there be no Variety among proposed Objects of Choice, then there is no Opportunity for Variety of Choice, of Difference of Determination. For that Determination of a Thing which is not different in any Respect, is not a different Determination, but the same. That this is no Quibble, may appear more fully anon.

The Arguments, to prove that the most High, in some Instances, chuses to do one Thing rather than another, where the Things themselves are perfectly without Difference, are two.

1. That the various Parts of infinite Time and Space, absolutely confidered, are perfectly alike, and don't differ at all one from another: And that therefore, when God determined to create the 338 Of God's creating the World, &c. Part IV. World in such a Part of infinite Duration and Space, rather than others, he determin'd and prefer'd among various Objects, between which there was no Preferableness, and absolutely no Difference.

Z World

Answ. This Objection supposes an infinite Length of Time before the World was created, distinguished by successive Parts, properly and truly so; or a Succession of limited and unmeasurable Periods of Time, following one another, in an infinitely long Series: which must needs be a groundless Imagination. The eternal Duration which was before the World, being only the Eternity of God's Existence; which is nothing else but his immediate, perfect and invariable Possession of the whole of his unlimited Life, together and at once; Vitae interminabilis, tota, simul perfecta Possession. Which is so generally allowed, that I need not stand to demonstrate it.

So.

^{* &}quot; If all created Beings were taken away, all Possibility " of any Mutation or Succession of one Thing to another " would appear to be also removed. Abstract Succession in Eternity is scarce to be understood. What is it that suc-" ceeds? One Minute to another perhaps, velut unda Juperwenit undam. But when we imagine this, we fancy that the Minutes are Things separately existing. This is the comof mon Notion; and yet it is a manifest Prejudice. Time is of nothing but the Existence of created successive Beings, and - Eternity the necessary Existence of the Deity. Therefore, " if this necessary Being hath no Change or Succession in his Mature, his Existence must of Course be unsuccessive. We " feem to commit a double Overfight in this Cafe; first, we " find Succession in the necessary Nature and Existence of the " Deity himself: Which is wrong, if the Reasoning above beof conclusive. And then we ascribe this Succession to Eternity, " confidered abliractedly from the eternal Being; and sup-" pose it, one knows not what, a Thing subsiding by it felf, " and flowing, one Minute after another. This is the Work " of pure Imagination, and contrary to the Reality of Things... . Hence

So this Objection supposes an Extent of Space beyond the Limits of the Creation, of an infinite Length, Breadth and Depth, truely and properly distinguished into different measurable Parts, limited at certain Stages, one beyond another, in an infinite Series: Which Notion of absolute and infinite Space is doubtless as unreasonable, as that now mention'd, of absolute and infinite Duration. 'Tis as improper, to imagine that the Immensity and Omnipresence of God is distinguished by a Series of Miles and Leagues, one beyond another; as that the infinite Duration of God is diftinguished by Months and Years, one after another. A Diversity and Order of distinct Parts, limited by certain Periods, is as conceivable, and does as naturally obtrude itself on our Imagination, in one Case as the other; and there is equal Reason in each Case, to suppose that our Imagination deceives us. 'Tis equally improper, to talk of Months and Years of the divine Existence, and Milesquares of Deity: And we equally deceive ourselves, when we talk of the World's being differently fix'd with Respect to either of these Sorts of Measures. I think, we know not what we mean, if we say, the World might have been differently placed from what it is, in the broad Expanse of Infinity; or, that it might have been differently fix'd in the long Line of Eternity: And all Arguments and Objections which are built on the Imaginations we are apt to have of infinite Extension or Duration, are Buildings sounded on Shadows, or Castles in the Air.

[&]quot; Hence the common metaphorical Expressions; Time ranks " a-pace, let us lay hold on the present Minute, and the like. The "Philosophers themselves missead us by their Illustrations: " They compare Eternity to the Motion of a Point running " on for ever, and making a traceless infinite line. Here the " Point is supposed a Thing actually sublisting, representing " the present Minute; and then they ascribe Motion or Suc-" cession to it: that is, they ascribe Motion to a meer Non-" entity, to illustrate to us a successive Eternity made up of " finite successive Parts. -- If once we allow an all-perfect " Mind, which hath an eternal, immutable and infinite Com-" prehension of all Things, always (and allow it we must) " the Distinction of past and future vanishes with Respect to " fuch a Mind.—In a Word, if we proceed Step by Step, as " above, the Eternity or Existence of the Deity will appear to " be Vitæ interminabilis, tota, si nul 3 perfecta Possessio; how " much foever this may have been a Paradox hitherto." Enquiry into the Nature of the human Soul. Vol. 2. 409, 410, 411 Edit. 3.

2. The fecond Argument, to prove that the most High wills one Thing rather than another, without any fuperior Fitness or Preferableness in the Thing prefer'd, is God's actually placing in different Parts of the World, Particles or Atoms of Matter that are perfectly equal and alike. The foremention'd Author fays, P. 78, &c. "If one " would descend to the minute specific Particles, of which different Bodies are composed, we 16 should see abundant Reason to believe that there 44 are Thousands of such little Particles or Atoms of Matter, which are perfectly equal and alike, " and could give no diffinct Determination to the "Will of God, where to place them." He there instances in Particles of Water, of which there are fuch immense Numbers, which compose the Rivers and Oceans of this World; and the infinite Myriads of the luminous and fiery Particles, which compose the Body of the Sun; so many, that it would be very unreasonable to suppose no two of them should be exactly equal and alike.

Answ. (1.) To this I answer: That as we must suppose Matter to be infinitely divisible, 'tis very unlikely that any two of all these Particles are exactly equal and alike; so unlikely, that it is a Thousand Thousand to one, yea, an infinite Number to one, but it is otherwise: And that although we should allow a great Similarity between the different Particles of Water and Fire, as to their general Nature and Figure; and however small we suppose those Particles to be, 'tis infinitely unlikely, that any two of them should be exactly equal in Dimensions and Quantity of Matter.---If we should suppose a great many Globes of the same Nature with the Globe of the Earth, it would be very strange, if there were any two of them that had exactly the same Number of Particles of Dust and Water in them. But infinitely less strange, than that two Particles of Light should have just the same Quantity of Matter. For a Particle of Light (according to the Doctrine of the infinite Divisibility of Matter) is composed of infinitely more affignable Parts, than there are Particles of Dust and Water in the Globe of the Earth. And as it is infinitely unlikely, that any two of these Particles should be equal; so it is, that they should be alike in other Respects: To instance in the Consiguration of their Surfaces. If there were very many Globes, of the Nature of the Earth, it would be very unlikely that any two should have exactly the same Number of Particles of Dust, Water and Stone, in their Surfaces, and all posited exactly alike, one with Respect to another, without any Difference, in any Part difcernable either by the naked Eye or Microscope; but infinitely less strange, than that two Particles of Light should be perfectly of the same Figure. For there are infinitely more affignable real Parts on the Surface of a Particle of Light, than there are Particles of Dust, Water and Stone, on the Surface of the serrestrial Globe.

342 Of God's placing differently Part IV.

An/w. (2.) But then, supposing that there are two Particles or Atoms of Matter perfectly equal and alike, which God has placed in different Parts of the Creation; as I will not deny it to be poffible for God to make two Bodies perfectly alike, and put them in different Places; yet it will not follow, that two different or diffinct Acts or Effects of the Divine Power have exactly the fame Fitness for the same Ends. For these two different Bodies are not different or distinct, in other Respects than those wherein they differ: They are two in no other Respects than wherein there is a Difference. If they are perfectly equal and alike in themselves, then they can be diffinguished, or be diffinct, only in those Things which are called Circumstances; as Place, Time, Rest, Motion, or some other present or past Circumstances or Relations. For stis Difference only that constitutes Distinction. If God makes two Bodies in themselves every Way equal and alike, and agreeing perfectly in all other Circumstances and Relations, but only their Place; then in this only is there any Distinction or Duplicity. The Figure is the fame, the Measure is the fame, the Solidity and Resistance are the same, and every Thing the same, but only the Place. Therefore what the Will of God determines, is this, namely, that there should be the same Figure, the same Extension, the same Resistance, \mathcal{E}_c in two different Places. And for this Determination he has fome Reafon. There is fome End, for which such a Determination and Act has a peculiar Fitness, above all other Acts. Here is no one Thing determined without an End, and no one Thing without a Fitness for that End, superior to any Thing elfe. If it be the Pleasure of God to cause the same Resistance, and the same Figure, to be in two different Places and Situations, we can no more justly argue from it, that here must be some Determination or Act of God's Will, that is wholly without Motive or End, then we can argue that whenever, in any Cafe it is a Man's Will to fpeak the fame Words, or make the fame Sounds at two different Times; there must be some Determination or Act of his Will, without any Motive or End. The Difference of Place, in the former Case, proves no more than the Difference of Time does in the other. If any one should say with Regard to the former Case, that there must be something determined without an End; viz. That of those two similar Bodies, this in particular should be made in this Place, and the other in the other, and should enquire why the Creator did not make them in a Tranfpolition, when both are alike, and each would equally have fuited either Place? The Enquiry supposes something that is not true; namely, that the two bodies differ and are distinct in other Refpects besides their Place. So that with this Distinction inherent in them, they might in their first creation have been transposed, and each might have begun it's Existence in the place of the other.

Let us for Clearness fake suppose, that God had at the Beginning made two Globes, each of an Inch Diameter, both perfect Spheres, and perfectly solid without Pores, and perfectly alike in every Respect, and placed them near one to another, one towards the right Hand, and the other towards the left, without any Difference as to Time, Motion or Rest, past or present, or any Circumstance, but only their Place; and the Question should be ask'd, Why God in their Creation placed 'em so? Why that which is made on the right Hand, was not made on the left, and vice versa? Let it be well considered, whether there 344 Of God's chusing among like Things, P.IV. be any Sense in such a Question; and whether the Enquiry don't suppose something false and absurd. Let it be considered, what the Creator must have done otherwise than he did, what different A& of Will or Power he must have exerted, in order to the Thing proposed. All that could have been done, would have been to have made two Spheres, perfectly alike, in the same Places where he has made them, without any Difference of the Things made, either in themselves, or in any Circumstance; so that the whole Effect would have been without any Difference, and therefore just the By the Supposition, the two Spheres are different in no other Respect but their Place; and therefore in other Respects they are the same. Each has the same Roundness: it is not a distinct Rotundity, in any other Respect but it's Situation. There are also the same Dimensions, differing in nothing but their Place. And so of their Resistance, and every Thing else that belongs to them.

Here if any chuses to say, "that there is a Difference in another Respect, viz. That they are not NUMERICALLY the fame: That it is thus with all the Qualities that belong to them: That it is confessed they are in some Respects the same; that is, they are both exactly alike; but yet numerically they differ. Thus the Roundness of one is not the same numerical, individual Roundness with that of the other." Let this be supposed; then the Question about the Determination of the divine Will in the Affair, is, Why did God will, that this individual Roundness should be at the right Hand, and the other individual Roundness at the left? Why did not he make them in a contrary Position? Let any rational Person consider, whether fuch Questions be not Words without a Meaning; as much as if God should see fit for fome fome Ends to cause the same Sounds to be repeated, or made at two different Times; the Sounds being perfectly the fame in every other Respect, but only one was a Minute after the other; and it should be ask'd upon it, why God caused these Sounds, numerically different, to fucceed one the other in fuch a Manner? why he did not make that individual Sound which was in the first Minute, to be in the fecond? and the individual Sound of the last Minute to be in the first; Which Enquiries would be even ridiculous; as I think every Perfon must see at once, in the Case proposed of two Sounds, being only the fame repeated, absolutely without any Difference, but that one Circumstance of Time. If the most High sees it will answer some good End, that the same Sound should be made by Lightning at two distinct Times, and therefore wills that it should be so, must it needs therefore be, that herein there is fome Acl of God's Will without any Motive or End? God faw fit often, at distinct Times, and on different Occasions, to say the very same Words to Moses; namely those, I am Jehrvah. And would it not be unreasonable, to infer as a certain Consequence from this, that here must be some Act or Acts of the divine Will, in determining and disposing these Words exactly alike at different Times, wholly without Aim or Inducement? But it would be no more unreasonable than to say, that there must be an Act of God's without any Inducement, if he fees it best, and for some Reafons, determines that there shall be the same Refiftence, the same Dimensions, and the same Figure, in feveral diffinct Places.

If in the Instance of the two Spheres, perfectly alike, it be supposed possible that God might have made them in a contrary Position; that which is made 346 Of God's chufing among like Things, P.IV. made at the right Hand, being made at the Left; then I ask, Whether it is not evidently equally possible, if God had made but one of them, and that in the Place of the right-hand Globe, that he might have made that numerically different from what it is, and numerically different from what he did make it; tho' perfectly alike, and in the fame Place; and at the fame Time, and in every Respect, in the same Circumstances and Relations? Namely, Whether he might not have made it numerically the fame with that which he has now made at the left Hand; and so have left that which is now created at the right Hand, in a State of Non-Existence? And if so, whether it would not have been possible to have made one in that Place, perfectly like thefe, and yet numerically differing from both? And let it be confidered, whether from this Notion of a numerical Difference in Bodies, perfectly equal and alike, which numerical Difference is fomething inherent in the Bodies themselves, and diverse from the Difference of Place or Time, or any Circumstance whatso-ever; it will not follow, that there is an infinite Number of numerically different possible Bodies, perfectly alike, among which God chuses, by a felf-determining Power, when he goes about to create Bodies.

Therefore let us put the Case thus: Supposing that God in the Beginning had created but one persectly solid Sphere, in a certain Place; and it should be enquired, Why God created that individual Sphere, in that Place, at that Time? And why he did not create another Sphere persectly like it, but numerically different, in the same Place, at the same Time? Or why he chose to bring into Being there, that very Body, rather than any of the infinite Number of other Bodies, persectly perfectly like it; either of which he could have made there as well, and would have answered his End as well? Why he caused to exist, at that Place and Time, that individual Roundness, rather than any other of the infinite Number of in-dividual Rotundities, just like it? Why that individual Refistance, rather than any other of the infinite Number of possible Resistances just like it? And it might as reasonably be asked, Why, when God nist caused it to Thunder, he caused that individual Sound then to be made, and not another just like it? Why did he make Choice of this very Sound, and reject all the infinite Number of other possible Sounds just like it, but numerically differing from it, and all differing one from another? I think, every Body must be sen-sible of the Absurdity and Nonsense of what is supposed in such Inquiries. And if we calmly attend to the Matter, we shall be convinced, that all fuch Kind of Objections as I am answering, are founded on nothing but the Imperfection of our Manner of conceiving of Things, and the Obscureness of Language, and great Want of Clearness and Precision in the Signification of Terms.

If any shall find Fault with this Reasoning, that it is going a great Length into metaphyfical Niceties and Subtilties; I answer, The Objection which they are in Reply to, is a metaphyfical Subtilty, and must be treated according to the Nature of it.

II. Another Thing alledged is, That innumerable Things which are determined by the divine ^{* &}quot; For Men to have Recourse to Subtilties, in raising Disti-" cultics, and then complain, that they should be taken off by "minutely examining these Subtilties, is a strange Kind of " Procedure." Nature of the Hum. Soul. V. 2. P. 331.

348 Of God's chusing among small Matters. P. IV. Will, and chosen and done by God rather than others, differ from those that are not chosen in so inconfiderable a Manner, that it would be unreafonable to suppose the Difference to be of any Confequence, or that there is any superiour Fitness or Goodness, that God can have Respect to in the Determination.

To which I answer; it is impossible for us to determine with any Certainty or Evidence, that because the Difference is very small, and appears to us of no Consideration, therefore there is absolutely no superiour Goodness, and no valuable End which can be proposed by the Creator and Governor of the World, in ordering such a Difference. The foremention'd Author mentions many Instances. One is, there being one Atom in the whole Universe more, or less. But I think it would be unreasonable to suppose, that God made one Atom in vain, or without any End or Motive. He made not one Atom but what was a Work of his almighty Power, as much as the whole Globe of the Earth, and requires as much of a constant Exertion of almighty Power to uphold it; and was made and is upheld understandingly, and on Defign, as much as if no other had been made but that. And it would be as unreasonable to suppose, that he made it without any Thing really aimed at in so doing, as much as to suppose that he made the Planet Jupiter without Aim or Defign.

'Tis possible, that the most minute Effects of the Creator's Power, the smallest assignable Difference between the Things which God has made, may be attended, in the whole Series of Events, and the whole Compass and Extent of their Influence, with very great and important Confequences.

Se. VIII. Necessity consist. with free Grace. 349 quences. If the Laws of Motion and Gravitation, laid down by Sir Isaac Newton, hold universally, there is not one Atom, nor the least assignable Part of an Atom, but what has Influence, every Moment, throughout the whole material Universe, to cause every Part to be otherwise than it would be, if it were not for that particular corporeal Existence. And however the Effect is insensible for the present, yet it may in Length of Time become great and important.

To illustrate this, Let us suppose two Bodies moving the fame Way, in strait Lines, perfectly parallel one to another; but to be diverted from this Parallel Courfe, and drawn one from another, as much as might be by the Attraction of an Atom, at the Distance of one of the furthest of the fix'd Stars from the Earth; these Bodies being turned out of the Lines of their parallel Motion, will, by Degrees, get further and further distant, one from the other; and tho' the Distance may be imperceptible for a long Time, yet at Length it may become very great. So the Revolution of a Planet round the Sun being retarded or accelerated, and the Orbit of it's Revolution made greater or less, and more or less elliptical, and so it's Periodical Time longer or fhorter, no more than may be by the Influence of the least Atom, might in Length of Time perform a whole Revolution sooner or later than otherwise it would have done which might make a vast Alteration with Regard to Millions of important Events. So the Influence of the least Particle may, for ought we know, have fuch Effect on something in the Constitution of some human Body, as to cause another Thought to arise in the Mind at a certain Time, than otherwise would have been; which in Length of Time (yea, and that not very great) might occafion 350 Necessity consist. with free Grace. Part IV. casion a vast Alteration thro' the whole World of Mankind. And so innumerable other Ways might be mention'd, wherein the least assignable Alteration may possibly be attended with great Consequences.

Another Argument, which the foremention'd Author brings against a necessary Determination of the divine Will by a superiour Fitness, is, that such Doctrine derogates from the Freeness of God's Grace and Goodness, in chusing the Objects of his Favour and Bounty, and from the Obligation upon Men to Thankfulness for special Benefits. P. 89, &c.

In answer to this Objection, I would observe,

- 1. That it derogates no more from the Goodness of God, to suppose the Exercise of the Benevolence of his Nature to be determin'd by Wisdom, than to suppose it determined by Chance, and that his Favours are bestowed altogether at Random, his Will being determin'd by nothing but perfect Accident, without any End or Design whatsoever; which must be the Case, as has been demonstrated, if Volition be not determined by a prevailing Motive. That which is owing to perfect Contingence, wherein neither previous Inducement, nor antecedent Choice has any Hand, is not owing more to Goodness or Benevolence, than that which is owing to the Instruence of a wise End.
- 2. 'Tis acknowledged, that if the Motive that determines the Will of God, in the Choice of the Objects of his Favours, be any moral Quality in the Object, recommending that Object to his Benevolence above others, his chusing that Object is not so great a Manifestation of the Freeness and Sovereignty of his Grace, as if it were otherwise.

Se.VIII. Necessity consist. with free Grace. 351 But there is no Necessity of supposing this, in order to our supposing that he has some wise End in View, in determining to bestow his Favours on one Person rather than another. We are to distinguish between the Merit of the Object of God's Favour, or a moral Qualification of the Object attracting that Favour and recommending to it, and the natural Fitness of such a Determination of the Act of God's Goodness, to answer some wise Design of his own, some End in the View of God's Omniscience. — 'Tis God's own Act, that is the proper and immediate Object of his Volition.

3. I suppose that none will deny, but that in fome Instances, God acts from wife Design in determining the particular Subjects of his Favours: None will fay, I prefume, that when God diffinguishes by his Bounty particular Societies or Perfons, He never, in any Instance, exercises any Wisdom in so doing, aiming at some happy Confequence. And if it be not denied to be fo in some Instances, then I would enquire, whether in these Instances God's Goodness is less manifested, than in those wherein God has no Aim or End at all? And whether the Subjects have less Cause of Thankfulness? And if so, who shall be thankful for the Bestowment of distinguishing Mercy, with that enhancing Circumstance of the Distinction's being made without an End? How shall it be known when God is influenced by some wife Aim, and when not? It is very manifest with Respect to the Apostle, Paul, that God had wife Ends in chusing Him to be a Christian and an Apostle, who had been a Perfecutor, &c. The Apostle himself mentions one End. 1 Tim. i. 15, 16. Christ Jesus came into the World to save Sinners, of whom I am chief. Howbeit, for this Cause I obtained Mercy, that in me first, Jesus Christ might shew forth all Long-suffering, for a Pattern to them who should bereafter believe on Him to Life everlasting. But yet the Apostle never look'd on it as a Diminution of the Freedom and Riches of divine Grace in his Election, which He so often and so greatly magnifies. This brings me to observe,

4. Our supposing such a moral Necessity in the Acts of God's Will as has been spoken of, is so far from necessarily derogating from the Riches of God's Grace to fuch as are the chosen Objects of his Favour, that in many Instances, this moral Necessity may arise from Goodness, and from the great Degree of it. God may chuse this Object rather than another, as having a superiour Fitness to answer the Ends, Designs and Inclinations of his Goodness; being more finful, and so more miserable and necessitous than others; the Inclinations of infinite Mercy and Benevolence may be more gratified, and the gracious Defign of God's fending his Son into the World may be more abundantly answered, in the Exercises of Mercy towards fuch an Object, rather than another.

One Thing more I would observe, before I finish what I have to say on the Head of the Neceffity of the Acts of God's Will; and that is, that fomething much more like a fervile Subjection of the divine Being to fatal Necessity, will follow from Arminian Principles, than from the Doctrines which they oppose. For they (at least most of them) suppose, with Respect to all Events that happen in the moral World depending on the Volitions of moral Agents, which are the most important Events of the Universe, to which all others are fubordinate; I fay, they suppose with respect to these, that God has a certain Foreknowledge of them, antecedent to any Purpofes or Decrees of his about them. And if fo, they have a fix'd fix'd certain Futurity, prior to any Defigns or Volitions of his, and independent on them, and to which his Volitions must be subject, as He would wifely accommodate his Affairs to this fix'd Futurity of the State of Things in the moral World. So that here, instead of a moral Necesfity of God's Will, arising from or confisting in the infinite Perfection and Blessedness of the divine Being, we have a fix'd unalterable State of Things, properly diffinct from the perfect Nature of the divine Mind, and the State of the divine Will and Defign, and entirely independent on these Things, and which they have no Hand in, because they are prior to them; and which God's Will is truly subject to, being obliged to conform or accommodate himself to it, in all his Purposes and Decrees, and in every Thing He does in his Disposals and Government of the World; the moral World being the End of the natural; fo that all is in vain, that is not accommodated to that State of the moral World, which confifts in, or depends upon the Acts and State of the Wills of moral Agents, which had a fix'd Futurition from Eternity. Such a Subjection to Necessity as this, would truly argue an Inferiority and Servitude, that would be unworthy of the supreme Being; and is much more agreable to the Notion which many of the Heathen had of Fate, as above the Gods, than that moral Necessity of Fitness and Wisdom which has been spoken of; and is truly repugnant to the absolute Sovereignty of God, and inconsistent with the Supremacy of his Will; and really subjects the Will of the most High to the Will of his Creatures, and brings him into Dependence upon them.

SECTION IX.

Concerning that Objection against the Doctrine which has been maintain'd, that it makes God the Author of Sin.

of the Necessity of Men's Volitions, or their necessary Connection with antecedent Events and Circumstances, makes the first Cause, and supreme Orderer of all Things, the Author of Sin; in that he has so constituted the State and Course of Things, that finful Volitions become necessary, in Consequence of his Disposal. Dr. Whithy, in his Discourse on the Freedom of the Will, * cites one of the Antients, as on his Side, declaring that this Opinion of the Necessity of the Will " ab-" folves Sinners, as doing nothing of their own " Accord which was Evil, and would cast all the "Blame of all the Wickedness committed in the "World, upon God, and upon his Providence, " if that were admitted by the Affertors of this " Fate; whether he himfelf did necessitate them " to do these Things, or ordered Matters so that " they should be constrain'd to do them by some " other Cause." And the Doctor says in another Place, † " In the Nature of the Thing, and in " the Opinion of Philosophers, Causa deficiens, in " rebus necessariis, ad Causam per is efficientem redu-" cenda eft. In Things necessary, the deficient 66 Cause must be reduced to the efficient. And in this Case the Reason is evident; because the " not doing what is required, or not avoiding " what is forbidden, being a Defect, must follow " from

^{*} On the five Points. P. 36r. + Itid. P. 486.

Sect. IX. making God the Author of Sin. 355 from the Position of the necessary Cause of that Deficiency."

Concerning this, I would observe the following

Things.

I. If there be any Difficulty in this Matter, 'tis nothing peculiar to this Scheme; 'tis no Difficulty or Difadvantage wherein it is diffinguished from the Scheme of Arminians; and therefore not reafonably objected by them.

Dr. Whithy supposes, that if Sin necessarily follows from God's withholding Affiftance, or if that Affiftance be not given which is abfolutely necesfary to the avoiding of Evil; then in the Nature of the Thing, God must be as properly the Author of that Evil, as if he were the efficient Cause of it. From whence, according to what he himfelf fays of the Devils and damned Spirits, God must be the proper Author of their perfect unrestrained Wickedness: He must be the efficient Caufe of the great Pride of the Devils, and of their perfect Malignity against God, Christ, his Saints, and all that is Good, and of the infatiable Cruelty of their Disposition. For he allows, that God has fo forfaken them, and does fo withhold his Assistance from them, that they are incapacitated from doing Good, and determined only to Evil. * Our Doctrine, in its Confequence, makes God the Author of Men's Sin in this World, no more, and in no other Sense, than his Doctrine, in its Confequence, makes God the Author of the hellifh Pride and Malice of the Devils. And doubtless the latter is as odious an Effect as the former.

Again, if it will follow at all, that God is the Author of Sin, from what has been supposed A a 2 of a fure and infallible Connection between Antecedents and Consequents, it will follow because of this, viz. That for God to be the Author or Orderer of those Things which he knows before-hand, will infallibly be attended with fuch a Confequence, is the fame Thing in Effect, as for him to be the Author of that Consequence. But if this be so, this is a Difficulty which equally attends the Doctrine of Arminians themselves; at least, of those of them who allow God's certain Fore-knowledge of all Events. For on the Supposition of such a Fore-knowledge, this is the Cafe with Respect to every Sin that is committed: God knew, that if he ordered and brought to pass such and such Events, fuch Sins would infallibly follow. Instance, God certainly fore knew, long before Judas was born, that if he ordered Things fo, that there should be such a Man born, at such a Time. and at fuch a Place, and that his Life should be preferved, and that he should, in divine Providence, be led into Acquaintance with Jesus; and that his Heart should be so influenced by God's Spirit or Providence, as to be inclined to be a Follower of Christ; and that he should be One of those Twelve, which should be chosen constantly to attend him as his Family; and that his Health should be preserved so that he should go up to Jerusalem, at the last Passover in Christ's Life; and it should be so ordered that Judas should fee Christ's kind Treatment of the Woman which anointed him at Bethany, and have that Reproof from Christ, which he had at that Time, and see and hear other Things, which excited his Enmity against his Master, and other Circumstances should be ordered, as they were ordered; it would be what would most certainly and infallibly follow, that Judas would betray his Lord, and would foon after Sect. IX. in the Existence of Sin. 357 after hang himself, and die impenitent, and be sent to Hell, for his horrid Wickedness.

^{*} On the five Points, P. 302. 305.

How GOD is concern'd Part IV.

Therefore this supposed Difficulty ought not to be brought as an Objection against the Scheme which has been maintain'd, as disagreeing with the Arminian Scheme, seeing 'tis no Difficulty owing to such a Disagreement; but a Difficulty wherein the Arminians share with us. That must be unreasonably made an Objection against our differing from them, which we should not escape or avoid at all by agreeing with them.

And therefore I would observe,

II. They who object, that this Doctrine makes God the Author of Sin, ought distinctly to explain what they mean by that Phrase, The Author of Sin. I know, the Phrase, as it is commonly used, signifies something very Ill. If by the Author of Sin, be meant the Sinner, the Agent, or Actor of Sin, or the Doer of a wicked Thing; so it would be a Reproach and Blasphemy, to suppose God to be the Author of Sin. In this Sense, I utterly deny God to be the Author of Sin; rejecting fuch an Imputation on the most High, as what is infinitely to be abhor'd; and deny any fuch Thing to be the Confequence of what I have laid down. But if by the Author of Sin, is meant the Permitter, or not a Hinderer of Sin; and at the fame Time, a Disposer of the State of Events, in fuch a Manner, for wife, holy and most excellent Ends and Purpofes, that Sin, if it be permitted or not hindered, will most certainly and infallibly follow: I say, if this be all that is meant, by being the Author of Sin, I don't deny that God is the Author of Sin, (tho' I dislike and rejust the Phrase, as that which by Use and Custom is apt to carry another Sense) it is no Reproach for the most High to be thus the Author of Sin. This is not to be the Aster of Sin, but on the contrary, of Holiness. What God doth herein, is holy; and a glorious Exercise of the infinite Excellency of his Nature. And I don't deny, that God's being thus the Author of Sin, follows from what I have laid down; and I affert, that it equally follows from the Doctrine which is maintained by most of the Arminian Divines.

That it is most certainly so, that God is in such a Manner the Disposer and Orderer of Sin, is evident, if any Credit is to be given to the Scripture; as well as because it is impossible in the Nature of Things to be otherwise. In such a Manner God ordered the Obstinacy of Pharaoh, in his refusing to obey God's Commands, to let the People go. Exod. iv. 21. I will barden bis Heart, and be shall not let the People go. Chap. vii. 2---5. Aaron thy Brother shall speak unto Pharaoh, that he send the Chil ren of Ifrael out of his Land. And I will harden Physioh's Heart, and multiply my Signs and my IVonder in the Land of Egypt. But Pharaoh shall not kearken unto you; that I may lay mine Hand upon Egypt, by great Judgments, &c. Chap. ix. 12. And the Lord barden'd the Heart of Pharaoh, and he bearken'd not unto them, as the Lord had spoken unto Moses. Chap. x. 1, 2. And the Lord said unto Moses, Go in unto Pharaoh; for I have harden'd his Heart, and the Heart of his Scrvants, that I might shew these my Signs before Him, and that thou mayst tell it in the Ears of thy Son, and thy Son's Son, what Things I have wrought in Egypt, and my Signs which I have done among It them, that ye may know that I am the Lord. Chap. xiv. 4. And I will harden Pharaoh's Heart, that he shall follow after them: and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his Hoft. Ver. S. And the Lord harden'd the Heart of Pharaoh Pharaoh King of Egypt, and he pursued after the Children of Ifrael. And it is certain that in fuch a Manner, God for wife and good Ends, ordered that Event, Joseph's being fold into Egypt, by his Brethren. Gen. xlv. 5. Now therefore be not gricued, nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me kither; for God did jend me before you to preserve Life. Ver. 7, 8. God did send me before you to preserve a Posterity in the Earth, and to save your Lives by a great Dcliverance: so that now it was not you, that sent me bither, but God. Pfal. cvii. 17. He fent a Man before them, even Toleph, who was fold for a Servant. 'Tis certain, that thus God ordered the Sin and Folly of Sibon King of the Amerites, in refusing to let the People of Israel pass by him peaceably. Deut. ii. 30. But Sihon King of Heshbon would not let us pass by him; for the Lord thy God harden'd his Spirit, and made his Heart obstinate, that He might deliver Him into thine Hand. 'Tis certain, that God thus ordered the Sin and Folly of the Kings of Canaan, that they attempted not to make Peace with Israel, but with a stupid Boldness and Obstinacy, fet themselves violently to oppose them and their God. Josh. xi. 20. For it was of the Lord, to barden their Hearts, that they should come against Ifrael in Battle, that he might destroy them utterly, and that they might have no Favour; but that he might destroy them, as the Lord commanded Moses. *Tis evident, that thus God ordered the treacherous Rebellion of Zedekiah, against the King of Babylon. Jer. lii. 3. For thro' the Anger of the Lord it came to pass in Jerusalem, and Judah, 'ill He had cast them out from his Presence, that Zedekish rebelled against the King of Babylon. So 2 Kings xxiv. 20. And 'tis exceeding manifest, that God thus ordered the Rapine and unrighteous Ravages of Nebuchalnezzar, in spoiling and ruining the Nations round about. Jer. xxv. 9. Behold, I will A = afend fend and take all the Families of the North, faith the Lord, and Nebuchadnezzar my Servant, and will bring them against this Land, and against all the Nations round about; and will utterly destroy them, and make them an Astonishment, and an Hissing, and perpetual Desolations. Chap. xliii. 10, 11. I will send and take Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon, my Servant: and I will set his Throne upon these stones that I have hid, and he shall spread his royal Pavilion over them. And when he cometh, he shall smite the Land of Egypt, and deliver such as are for Death to Death, and fuch as are for Captivity to Captivity, and fuch as are for the Sword to the Sword. Thus God represents himself as fending for Nebuchadnezzar, and taking of him and his Armies, and bringing him against the Nations which were to be destroyed by him, to that very End, that he might utterly destroy them, and make them desolate; and as appointing the Work that he should do, fo particularly, that the very Persons were designed, that he should kill with the Sword; and those that should be kill'd with Famine and Pestilence, and those that should be carried into Captivity; and that in doing all these Things, he should act as his Servant: By which, less can't be intended, than that he should serve his Purposes and Defigns. And in Jer. xxvii. 4, 5, 6. God declares how he would cause him thus to serve his Defigns, viz. by bringing this to pass in his sovereign Disposals, as the great Possessor and Governor of the Universe, that disposes all Things just as pleases him. Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel; I have made the Earth, the Man and the Beast that are upon the Ground, by my great Power, and my firetched out Arm, and have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me: And now I have given all these Lands into the Hands of Nebuchadnezzar MY SERVANT, and the Beafts of the Field Field have I given also to serve him. And Nebuchadnezzar is spoken of as doing these Things, by having his Arms strengthened by God, and having God's Sword put into his Hands, for this End. Ezek. xxx. 24, 25, 26. Yea, God speaks of his terribly ravaging and wasting the Nations, and cruelly destroying all Sorts, without Distinction of Sex or Age, as the Weapon in God's Hand, and the Instrument of his Indignation, which God makes use of to fulfil his own Purposes, and execute his own Vengeance. Jer. li. 20, &c. 1 hou art my Battle-Axe, and Weapons of War. For with thee will I break in Pieces the Nations, and with thee I will destroy Kingdoms, and with thee I will break in Pieces the Horse and his Rider, and with thee I will break in Pieces the Chariot and his Rider; with thee also will I break in Pieces Man and Woman; and with thee will I break in Pieces Old and Young; and with thee will I break in Pieces the young Man and the Maid, &c. 'Tis represented, that the Defigns of Nebuckadnezzar, and those that destroyed Terusalem, never could have been accomplished, had not God determined them, as well as they; Lam. iii. 37. Who is he that saith, and it cometh to poss, and the Lord commandeth it net? And yet the King of Babylon's thus destroying the Nations, and especially the Tews, is spoken of as his great Wickedness, for which God finally destroyed him. Isa. xiv. 4, 5, 6, 12. Hab. ii. 5,-12. and fer. Chap. I. and li. 'Tis most manifest, that God, to ferve his own Defigns, providentially ordered Shimei's curfing David. 2 Sam. xvi. 10, 11. Tis certain, that God thus, for excellent, holy, gracious and glorious Ends, ordered the Fact which they committed, who were concerned in Christ's Death; and that therein they did but fulfil God's Defigns. As, I truft, no Christian will deny it was the Defign of God, that Christ should be crucified, and that for this End, he came into the World. 'Tis very manifest by many Scriptures, that the whole Affair of Christ's Crucifixion, with it's Circumstances, and the Treachery of Judas, that made Way for it, was ordered in God's Providence, in Pursuance of his Purpose; notwithstanding the Violence that is used with those plain Scriptures, to obscure and pervert the Sense of 'em. Acts ii. 23. Him being delivered, by the determinate Counsel and Foreknowledge of God, * ye have taken, and with wicked Hands, have crucified and flain. Luke xxii. 21, 22. † But behold the Hand of him that betrayeth me, is with me on the Table: And truly the Son of Man goeth, as it was determined. Acts iv. 27, 28. For of a Truth, against thy boly Child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the People of Israel, were gathered together, for to do what soever thy Hand and thy Counsel determined. before to be done. In Rev. xvii. 17. The agreeing of the Kings of the Earth to give their Kingdom to the Beaft, tho' it was a very wicked Thing in them, is spoken of as a fulfilling-God's Will, and what God had put into their Hearts to do. 'Tis manifest, that God sometimes permits Sin to be committed, and at the same Time orders Things so, that if he permits the Fact, it will come to pass, because on some Accounts he sees it needful and of Importance that it should come to pass. Matt. xviii. 7. It must needs be, that Offences come; but Wo to that Man by whom the Offence cometh. With 1 Cor. xi. 19. For there must also be Heresses among you, that they which are approved, may be made manifest among you.

Christ's

Thus it is certain and demonstrable, from the holy Scriptures, as well as the Nature of Things, and the Principles of Arminians, that God permits Sin; and at the same Time, so orders Things, in his Providence, that it certainly and infallibly will come to pass, in Consequence of his Permission.

I proceed to observe in the next. Place,

III. That there is a great Difference between God's being concerned thus, by his Permission, in an Event and A&t, which in the inherent Subject and Agent of it, is Sin, (tho' the Event will certainly follow on his Permission,) and his being concerned in it by preducing it and exerting the A&t of Sin; or between his being the Orderer of it's certain Existence, by not kindering it, under certain certain Circumstances, and his being the proper After or Author of it, by a positive Agency or Efficiency. And this, notwithstanding what Dr. Whithy offers about a Saying of Philosophers, that Causa deficiens, in Rebus necessariis, ad Causam per se efficientem reducenda est. As there is a vast Difference between the Sun's being the Cause of the Lightfomeness and Warmth of the Atmosphere, Brightness of Gold and Diamonds, by its Prefence and positive Influence; and its being the Occasion of Darkness and Frost, in the Night, by its Motion, whereby it descends below the Horizon. The Motion of the Sun is the Occafion of the latter Kind of Events; but it is not the proper Cause, Efficient or Producer of them; tho' they are necessarily consequent on that Motion, under fuch Circumstances: No more is any Action of the divine Being the Cause of the Evil of Men's Wills. If the Sun were the proper Caule of Cold and Darkness, it would be the Fountain of these Things, as it is the Fountain of Light and Heat: And then fomething might be argued from the Nature of Cold and Darkness, to a Likeness of Nature in the Sun; and it might be justly infer'd, that the Sun itself is dark and cold, and that his Beams are black and frosty. But from its being the Cause no otherwise than by its Departure, no such Thing can be infer'd, but the contrary; it may justly be argued, that the Sun is a bright and hot Body, if Cold and Darkness are found to be the Consequence of its Withdrawment; and the more constantly and necessarily these Effects are connected with, and confined to its Absence, the more strongly does it argue the Sun to be the Fountain of Light and Heat. So, inafmuch as Sin is not the Fruit of any positive Agency or Influence of the most High, but on the contrary, arises from the withholding of his Action

Action and Energy, and under certain Circumstances, necessarily follows on the Want of his Influence; this is no Argument that he is sinful, or his Operation Evil, or has any Thing of the Nature of Evil; but on the contrary, that He, and his Agency, are altogether good and holy, and that he is the Fountain of all Holiness. It would be strange arguing indeed, because Men never commit Sin, but only when God leaves 'em to themselves, and necessarily sin, when he does so, that therefore their Sin is not from themselves, but from God; and so, that God must be a sinful Being: As strange as it would be to argue, because it is always dark when the Sun is gone, and never dark when the Sun is present, that therefore all Darkness is from the Sun, and that his Disk and Beams must needs be black.

IV. It properly belongs to the supreme and abfolute Governor of the Universe, to order all important Events within his Dominion, by his Wisdom: But the Events in the moral World are of the most important Kind; such as the moral Actions of intelligent Creatures, and their Consequences.

These Events will be ordered by something. They will either be disposed by Wisdom, or they will be disposed by Chance; that is, they will be disposed by blind and undesigning Causes, if that were possible, and could be called a Disposal. Is it not better, that the Good and Evil which happens in God's World, should be ordered, regulated, bounded and determin'd by the good Pleasure of an infinitely wise Being, who perfectly comprehends within his Understanding and constant View, the Universality of Things, in all their Extent and Duration, and sees all the Instuence of every Event, with Respect to every individual Thing and Circumstance, throughout the grand System, and the whole of the eternal Series of Confequences; than to leave these Things to fall out by Chance, and to be determined by those Causes which have no Understanding or Aim? Doubtless, in these important Events, there is a better and a worfe, as to the Time, Subject, Place, Manner and Circumstances of their coming to pass, with Regard to their Influence on the State and Course of Things. And if there be, 'tis certainly best that they should be determined to that Time, Place, &c. which is best. And therefore 'tis in its own Nature fit, that Wisdom, and not Chance, should order these Things. it belongs to the Being, who is the Poffessor of infinite Wifdom, and is the Creator and Owner of the whole System of created Existences, and has the Care of all; I fay, it belongs to him, to take Care of this Matter; and he would not do what is proper for him, if he should neglect it. And it is so far from being unholy in him, to undertake this Affair, that it would rather have been unholy to neglect it; as it would have been a neglecting what fitly appertains to him; and fo it would have been a very unfit and unfuitable Neglect.

Therefore the Sovereignty of God doubtless extends to this Matter: especially confidering, that if it should be supposed to be otherwise, and God should leave Men's Volitions, and all moral Events, to the Determination and Disposition of blind and unmeaning Causes, or they should be left to happen perfectly without a Cause; this would be no more consistent with Liberty, in any Notion of it, and particularly not in the Arminian Notion of it, than if these Events were subject to the Disposal of divine Providence, and the Will of Man were determined by Circumstances which are ordered and disposed by divine Wisdom; as appears by what has been already observed. But 'tis evident, that such a providential disposing and determining Men's moral Actions, tho' it infers a moral Necessity of those Actions, yet it does not in the least infringe the real Liberty of Mankind; the only Liberty that common Sense teaches to be necessary to moral Agency, which, as has been demonstrated, is not inconsistent with such Necessity.

On the whole, it is manifest, that God may be, in the Manner which has been described, the Orderer and Disposer of that Event, which in the inherent Subject and Agent is moral Evil; and yet His fo doing may be no moral Evil. He may will the Disposal of such an Event, and it's coming to pass for good Ends, and his Will not be an immoral or finful Will, but a perfect holy Will. And he may actually in his Providence fo dispose and permit Things, that the Event may be certainly and infallibly connected with fuch Disposal and Permission, and his Act therein not be an immoral or unholy, but a perfectly holy Act. Sin may be an evil Thing, and yet that there should be such a Disposal and Permission, as that it thould come to pass, may be a good Thing. This is no Contradiction, or Inconfiftence. Joseph's Brethren's felling him into Egypt, confider it only as it was acted by them, and with Respect to their Views and Aims which were evil, was a very bad Thing; but it was a good Thing, as it was an Event of God's ordering, and confider'd with Refpect to his Views and Aims which were good. Gen. 1. 20. As for you, ye thought Evil against me; but God meant it unto Good. So the Crucifixion of Christ.

Christ, if we consider only those Things which belong to the Event as it proceeded from his Murderers, and are comprehended within the Compass of the Affair considered as their Act, their Principles, Difpositions, Views and Aims; fo it was one of the most heinous Things that ever was done; in many Respects the most horrid of all Acts: But confider it, as it was will'd and ordered of God, in the Extent of his Defigns and Views, it was the most admirable and glorious of all Events; and God's willing the Event was the most holy Volition of God, that ever was made known to Men; and God's Act in ordering it. was a divine Act, which above all others, manifests the moral Excellency of the divine Being.

The Confideration of these Things may help us to a sufficient Answer to the Cavils of Arminians concerning what has been supposed by many Calvinistes, of a Distinction between a secret and revealed Will of God, and their Diversity one from the other; fuppofing, that the Calvinifts herein ascribe inconfishent Wills to the most High: Which is without any Foundation. God's fecret and revealed Will, or in other Words, his disposing and perceptive Will may be diverse, and exercised in diffimilar Acts, the one in disapproving and opposing, the other in willing and determining, without any Inconfistence. Because, altho' these dissimilar Exercifes of the divine Will may in some Respects relate to the fame Things, yet in Strictness they have different and contrary Objects, the one Evil and the other Good. Thus for Instance, the Crucifixion of Christ was a Thing contrary to the revealed or perceptive Will of God; because, as it was view'd and done by his malignant Murderers, it was a Thing infinitely contrary to the holy Nature of God, and so necessarily contrary to the holy holy Inclination of his Heart revealed in his Law. Yet this don't at all hinder but that the Crucifixion of Christ, considered with all those glorious Confequences, which were within the View of the divine Omniscience, might be indeed, and therefore might appear to God to be, a glorious Event; and confequently be agreable to his Will, though this Will may be fecret, i. e. not revealed in God's And thus confidered, the Crucifixion of Christ was not evil, but good. If the secret Exercises of God's Will were of a Kind that is dissimilar and contrary to his revealed Will, respecting the same, or like Objects; if the Objects of both were good, or both evil; then indeed to ascribe contrary Kinds of Volition or Inclination to God, respecting these Objects, would be to ascribe an inconsistent Will to God: but to ascribe to Him different and opposite Exercises of Heart, respecting different Objects, and Objects contrary one to another, is fo far from supposing God's Will to be inconfistent with it felf, that it can't be supposed confishent with it felf any other Way. For any Being to have a Will of Choice respecting Good, and at the same Time a Will of Rejection and Refufal respecting Evil, is to be very confiftent: But the contrary, viz. to have the same Will towards these contrary Objects, and to chuse and love both Good and Evil at the same Time, is to be very inconsistent.

There is no Inconfiftence in supposing, that God may hate a Thing as it is in it self, and confidered simply as Evil, and yet that it may be his Will it should come to pass, considering all Confequences. I believe, there is no Person of good Understanding, who will venture to say, he is certain that it is impossible it should be best, taking in the whole Compass and Extent of Existence, and all Consequences in the endless Series of Events, that there should be such a Thing as moral Evil in the World. * And if so, it will certainly

* Here are worthy to be observed some Passages of a late noted Writer, of our Nation, that no Body who is acquainted with Him will suspect to be very favourable to Calvinism. " It is difficult (fays he) to handle the Necessity of Evil in such " a Manner, as not to stumble such as are not above being a-" larmed at Propositions which have an uncommon Sound. 66 But if Philosophers will but reflect calmly on the Matter, "they will find, that confisently with the unlimited Power of the supreme Cause, it may be said, that in the best order-" ed System, Evils must have Place."—Turnbull's PRINCIPLES of moral Philosophy. Pag. 327, 328. He is there speaking of noral Evils, as may be feen.

Again the Same Author, in his Jecond Vol. entitled, Christian Philosophy, Pag. 35. has these Words: " If the Author and " Governor of all Things be infinitely perfect, then whatever " is, is right; of all possible Systems he hath chosen the best : " and confequently there is no absolute Evil in the Universe.— "This being the Cafe, all the seeming Impersections or Evils in " it are fuch only in a partial View; and with Respect to the 4 auhole System, they are Goods. Ibid. Pag. 37. " Whence then comes Evil, is the Question that

" hath in all Ages been reckon'd the Gordian Knot in Philosoof phy. And indeed, if we own the Existence of Evil in the World in an absolute Sense, we diametrically contradict what " hath been just now prov'd of God. For if there be any Evil " in the System, that is not good with Respect to the whole, " then is the subole not good, but evil: or at best, very im-" perfect: And an Author must be as his Workmanship is; as " is the Effect, such is the Cause. But the Solution of this " Difficulty is at Hand; That there is no Evil in the Universe. "What! Are there no Pains, no Imperfections? Is there no " Wifery, no Vice in the World? Or are not these Evils? Evils indeed they are; that is, those of one fort are hurtful, " and those of the other fort are equally hurtful and abomina-" ble: but they are not evil or mischievous with Respect to " the whole."

Ibid. Pag. 42. " But He is at the fame Time faid to create er Evil, Darknets, Confusion; and yet to do no Evil, but to be " the Author of Good only. He is called the Father of Lights, " the Author of every perfect and good Gift, with whom there is " no Variableress nor Shadow of Tunning, who tempteth no Man, follow, that an infinitely wife Being, who always chuses what is best, must chuse that there should be fuch a Thing. And if fo, then fuch a Choice is not an Evil, but a wife and holy Choice. And if so, then that Providence which is agreable to fuch a Choice, is a wife and holy Providence. Men do will Sin as Sin, and so are the Authors and Actors of it: They love it as Sin, and for evil Ends and Purpofes. God don't will Sin as Sin, or for the fake of any Thing evil; tho' it be his Pleafure fo to order Things, that He permitting, Sin will come to pass; for the sake of the great Good that by his Disposal shall be the Consequence. His willing to order Things so that Evil should come to pass, for the take of the contrary Good, is no Argument that He don't hate Evil, as Evil: And if so, then it is no Reason why he mayn't reasonably forbid Evil as Evil, and punish it as such.

The Arminians themselves must be obliged, whether they will or no, to allow a Distinction of God's Will, amounting to just the fame Thing that Calvinists intend by their Distinction of a secret and revealed Will. They must allow a Distinction of those Things which God thinks best should be, confidering all Circumstances and Consequences, and fo are agreable to his difpoling Will, and those Things which he loves, and are agreable to his 8 h 2 Nature.

" because it is requisite to the greater Good purined."

[&]quot; but giveth to all Men liberal's; and upbraideth not. And yet by the Prophet Isaias He is introduced saying of Himself, "I form Light, and create Darkness; I nake Peace, and create "Evil: I the Lord do all these Things. What is the Mean-" ing, the plain Language of all this, but that the Lord de-" lighteth in Goodness, and (as the Scripture speaks) Evil is " his strange Work? He intends and pursues the universal Good " of his Creation: and the Evil which hoppens, is not per-" mitted for it's own fake, or thro' any Pleasure in Evil, but

Nature, in themselves considered. Who is there that will dare to say, that the hellish Pride, Malice and Cruelty of Devils, are agreable to God, and what He likes and approves? And yet, I trust, there is no Christian Divine but what will allow, that 'tis agreable to God's Will so to order and dispose Things concerning them, so to leave them to themselves, and give them up to their own Wickedness, that this perfect Wickedness should be a necessary Consequence. Befure Dr. Whithy's Words do plainly suppose and allow it. †

These following Things may be laid down as Maxims of plain Truth, and indisputable Evidence.

1. That God is a perfettly happy Being, in the most absolute and highest Sense possible.

2. That it will follow from hence, that God is free from every Thing that is contrary to Happines; and so, that in strict Propriety of Speech, there is no such Thing as any Pain, Grief or Trouble in God.

3. When any intelligent Being is really crofs'd and disappointed, and Things are contrary to what He truly defires, He is the less pleased, or has less Pleasure, his Pleasure and Happiness is diminished, and he suffers what is disagreable to him, or is the Subject of something that is of a Nature contrary to Joy and Happiness, even Pain and Grief. ‡

From

† Whiely on the five Points, Edit. 2. P. 300, 305, 309.
† Certainly 'tis not less abfurd and unreasonable, to talk of God's Will and Defire's being truly and properly cross'd, without his suffering any Uneasiness, or any Thing grievous or disagreable, than it is to talk of something that may be called a revealed Will, which may in some Respect be different from a secret Purpose; which Purpose may be fulfilled, when the other is opposed.

From this last Axiom it follows, that if no Distinction is to be admitted between God's Hatred of Sin, and his Will with Respect to the Event and the Existence of Sin, as the allwise Determiner of all Events, under the View of all Confequences through the whole Compass and Series of Things; I fay, then it certainly follows, that the coming to pass of every individual Act of Sin is truly, all Things confidered, contrary to his Will, and that his Will is really crofs'd in it; and this in Proportion as He hates it. And as God's Hatred of Sin is infinite, by Reafon of the infinite Contrariety of his holy Nature to Sin; fo his Will is infinitely crofs'd, in every Act of Sin that happens. Which is as much as to fay, He endures that which is infinitely disagreable to Him, by Means of every Act of Sin that He fees committed. And therefore, as appears by the preceeding Politions, He endures truly and really, infinite Grief or Pain from every Sin. And fo He must be infinitely cross'd, and fuffer infinite Pain, every Day, in Millions of Millions of Instances: He must continually be the Subject of an immense Number of real, and truly infinitely great Croffes and Vexations. Which would be to make him infinitely the most miserable of all Beings.

If any Objector should fay; All that these Things amount to, is, that God may do Evil that Good may come; which is justly esteem'd immoral and finful in Men; and therefore may be justly esteem'd inconsistent with the moral Persections of God. I answer, That for God to dispose and permit Evil, in the Manner that has been spoken of, is not to do Evil that Good may come; for it is not to do Evil at all.—In Order to a Thing's being morally evil, there must be one of these Things belonging to it: Either it must be a Thing B b 3 unsit and unsuitable in it's own Nature; or it must have a bad Tendency; or it must proceed from an evil Disposition, and be done for an evil End. But neither of these Things can be attributed to God's ordering and permitting fuch Events, as the immoral Acts of Creatures, for good Ends. (1.) It is not unfit in it's own Nature, that He should do se. For it is in it's own Nature fit, that infinite Wildom, and not blind Chance, should dispose moral Good and Evil in the World. And 'tis fit, that the Being who has infinite Wisdom, and is the Maker, Owner, and supreme Governor of the World, should take Care of that Matter. And therefore there is no Unfitness, or Unfuitableness in his doing it. It may be unfit, and fo immoral, for any other Beings to go about to order this Affair; because they are not possess'd of a Wisdom, that in any Manner fits them for it; and in other Respects they are not fit to be trusted with this Affair; nor does it belong to them, they not being the Owners and Lords of the Universe.

We need not be afraid to affirm, that if a wife and good Man knew with absolute Certainty, it would be best, all Things considered, that there should be such a Thing as moral Evil in the World, it would not be contrary to his Wisdom and Gooodness, for him to chuse that it should be fo. 'Tis no evil Defire, to defire Good, and to defire that which, all Things confidered, is best. And it is no unwife Choice, to chuse that That fhould be, which it is best should be; and to chuse the Existence of that Thing concerning which this is known, viz. that it is best it should be, and so is known in the whole to be most worthy to be chosen. On the contrary, it would be a plain Defect in Wisdom and Goodness, for him not to chuse it. And the Reason why he might not order it, if he were able, would not be because he might not defire it, but only the ordering of that Matter don't belong to him. But it is no Harm for Him who is by Right, and in the greatest Propriety, the supreme Orderer of all Things, to order every Thing in fuch a Manner, as it would be a Point of Wisdom in Him to chuse that they should be ordered. If it would be a plain Defect of Wisdom and Goodness in a Being, not to chuse that That should be, which He certainly knows it would, all Things confidered, be best should be (as was but now observed) then it must be impossible for a Being who has no Defect of Wisdom and Goodness, to do otherwise than chuse it should be; and that, for this very Reason, because He is perfectly wife and good. And if it be agreable to perfect Wisdom and Goodness for him to chuse that it should be, and the ordering of all Things fupremely and perfectly belongs to him, it must be agreable to infinite Wifdom and Goodness, to order that it should be. If the Choice is good, the ordering and disposing Things according to that Choice must also be good. It can be no Harm in one to whom it belongs to do kis Will in the Armies of Heaven, and amongst the Inhabitants of the Earth, to execute a good Volition. If this Will be good, and the Object of his Will be, all Things confidered, good and best, then the chusing or willing it is not willing Evil that Good may come. And if fo, then his ordering according to that Will is not doing Evil, that Good may come.

2. 'Tis not of a bad Tendency, for the supreme Being thus to order and permit that moral Evil to be, which it is best should come to pass. For that it is of good Tendency, is the very Thing supposed in the Point now in Question .--- Christ's Crucifixion, tho' a most horrid Fact in them that perpetrated it, was of most glorious Tendency as permitted and ordered of God.

3. Nor is there any Need of supposing, it froceeds from any evil Disposition or Aim: for by the Supposition, what is aim'd at is Good, and Good is the actual Issue, in the final Result of Things.

SECTION X.

Concerning Sin's first Entrance into the World.

HE Things which have already been offered, may ferve to obviate or clear many of the Objections which might be raifed concerning Sin's first coming into the World; as tho' it would follow from the Doctrine maintain'd, that God must be the Author of the first Sin, thro' his so disposing Things, that it should necessarily follow from his Permission, that the sinful Act should be committed, &c. I need not therefore stand to repeat what has been said already, about such a Necessity's not proving God to be the Author of Sin, in any ill Sense, or in any such Sense as to infringe any Liberty of Man, concerned in his moral Agency, or Capacity of Blame, Guilt and Punishment.

But if it should nevertheless be said, Supposing the Case so, that God, when he had made Man, might so order his Circumstances, that from these Circumstances, together with his withholding further Assistance and divine Influence, his Sin would infallibly sollow, Why might not God as well have first made Man with a fixed prevailing Principle of Sin in his Heart?

I answer,

I answer, 1. It was meet, if Sin did come into Existence, and appear in the World, it should arise from the Imperfection which properly belongs to a Creature, as fuch, and should appear so to do, that it might appear not to be from God as the Efficient or Fountain. But this could not have been, if Man had been made at first with Sin in his Heart; nor unless the abiding Principle and Habit of Sin were first introduced by an evil Act of the Creature. If Sin had not arose from the Imperfection of the Creature, it would not have been so visible, that it did not arise from God, as the positive Cause, and real Source of it .--- But it would require Room that can't be here allowed, fully to confider all the Difficulties which have been started concerning the first Entrance of Sin into the World.

And therefore,

2. I would observe, that Objections against the Doctrine that has been laid down, in Opposition to the Arminian Notion of Liberty, from these Difficulties, are altogether impertinent; because no additional Difficulty is incurred, by adhering to a Scheme in this Manner differing from theirs, and none would be removed or avoided, by agreeing with, and maintaining theirs. Nothing that the Arminians fay, about the Contingence, or felfdetermining Power of Man's Will, can ferve to explain with less Difficulty, how the first finful Volition of Mankind could take Place, and Manbe justly charged with the Blame of it. To fay, the Will was felf-determined, or determined by free Choice, in that finful Volition; which is to fay, that the first sinful Volition was determined by a foregoing finful Volition; is no Solution of the Difficulty. It is an odd Way of folving Difficulties, to adyance greater, in order to it. To fay, Two and Two 378 Of Sin's first Entrance, &c. Part IV.

Two makes Nine; or, that a Child begat his Father, folves no Difficulty: No more does it, to fay, The first sinful Act of Choice was before the first finful Act of Choice, and chose and determined it, and brought it to pass. Nor is it any better Solution, to fay, The first sinful Volition chose, determined and produced itself; which is to fay, It was before it was. Nor will it go any further towards helping us over the Difficulty, to fay, The first finful Volition arose accidentally, without any Cause at all; any more than it will folve that difficult Question, How the World could be made out of Nothing? to fay, It came into Being out of Nothing, without any Cause; as has been already observed. And if we should allow that That could be, that the first evil Volition should arife by perfect Accident, without any Caufe, it would relieve no Difficulty, about God's laying the Blame of it to Man. For how was Man to Blame for perfect Accident, which had no Caufe, and which therefore, he (to be fure) was not the Caufe of, any more than if it came by fome external Cause? —— Such Kind of Solutions are no better, than if some Person, going about to solve fome of the strange mathematical Paradoxes, about infinitely great and small Quantities; as, that some infinitely great Quantities are infinitely greater than fome other infinitely great Quantities; and also that some infinitely small Quantities are infinitely lefs than others, which yet are infinitely little; in order to a Solution, should fay, That Mankind have been under a Mistake, in supposing a greater Quantity to exceed a smaller; and that a Hundred multiplied by Ten, makes but a single Unit.

SECTION XI.

Of a supposed Inconsistence of these Principles, with GOD's moral Character.

HE Things which have been already observed, may be sufficient to answer most of the ved, may be fufficient to answer most of the Objections, and filence the great Exclamations of Arminians against the Calvinists, from the supposed Inconfistence of Calvinistic Principles with the moral Perfections of God, as exercised in his Government of Mankind. The Confiftence of fuch a Doctrine of Necessity as has been maintained, with the Fitness and Reasonableness of God's Commands, Promifes and Threatnings, Rewards and Punishments, has been particularly considered: The Cavils of our Opponents, as tho' our Doctrine of Necessity made God the Author of Sin, have been answered; and also their Objection against these Principles, as inconsistent with God's Sincerity, in his Counfels, Invitations and Perfwafions, has been already obviated, in what has been observed, respecting the Consistence of what Calvinifts suppose concerning the secret and revealed Will of God: By that it appears, there is no Repugnance in supposing it may be the secret Will of God, that his Ordination and Permission of Events should be such that it shall be a certain Confequence, that a Thing never will come to pass; which yet it is Man's Duty to do, and so God's perceptive Will, that he should do; and this is the fame Thing as to fay, God may fincerely command and require him to do it. And if he may be fincere in commanding him, he may for the fame Reason be sincere in counselling, inviting and using Persuasions with him to do it. Counsels and Invitations are Manifestations of God's preceptive Will, or of what God loves, and what is in it felf, and as Man's Act, agreable to his Heart; and not of his disposing Will, and what he chuses as a Part of his own infinite Scheme of Things. It has been particularly shewn, Part III. Sect. IV. that fuch a Necessity as has been maintained, is not inconfistent with the Propriety and Fitness of divine Commands; and for the same Reason, not inconfistent with the Sincerity of Invitations and Counfels, in the Corollary at the End of that Section. Yea, it hath been shewn, Part III. Sect. VII. Coral. 1. that this Objection of Arminians, concerning the Sincerity and Use of divine Exhortations, Invitations and Counfels, is demonstrably against themselves.

Notwithstanding, I would further observe, that the Difficulty of reconciling the Sincerity of Counfels, Invitations and Perfuafions, with fuch an antecedent known Fixedness of all Events, as has been fupposed, is not peculiar to this Scheme, as distinguished from that of the Generality of Armimians, which acknowledge the absolute Foreknowledge of God: And therefore, it would be unreasonably brought as an Objection against my differing from them. The main seeming Difficulty in the Case is this: That God in counselling, inviting and perfuading, makes a Shew of aiming at, feeking and using Endeavours for the Thing exhorted and perfuaded to; whereas, 'tis impossible for any intelligent Being truly to seek, or use Endeavours for a Thing, which he at the same Time knows most perfectly will not come to pass; and that it is absurd to suppose, he makes the obtaining of a Thing his End, in his Calls and Counsels, which he at the same Time infallibly knows will not be obtain'd by these Means.

Now, if God knows this, in the utmost Certainty and Perfection, the Way by which he comes by this Knowledge makes no Difference. If he knows it by the Necessity which he fees in Things, or by some other Means; it alters not the Case. But it is in Effect allowed by Arminians themselves, that God's inviting and perfuading Men to do Things, which he at the fame Time certainly knows will not be done, is no Evidence of Infincerity; because they allow, that God has a certain Foreknowledge of all Men's finful Actions and Omissions. And as this is thus implicitly allowed by most Arminians, so all that presend to own the Scriptures to be the Word of God, must be constrained to allow it. -- God commanded and counfel'd Pharaoh to let his People go, and used Arguments and Perfuasions to induce him to it; he laid before him Arguments taken from his infinite Greatness and almighty Power (Exod. vii. 16.) and forewarned him of the fatal Confequences of his Refusal, from Time to Time; (Chap. viii. 1, 2, 20, 21. Chap. ix. 1---5. 13--17. and x. 3, 6.) He commanded Moses, and the Elders of Israel, to go and befeech Pharaob to let the People go; and at the fame Time told 'em, he knew furely that he would not comply to it. Exod. iii. 18, 19. And thou shall come, thou and the Elders of Ifrael, unto the King of Egypt, and you shall say unto him; The Lord God of the Hebrews hath met with us; and now let us go, we befeech thee, three Days Journey into the Wilderness, that we may Sacrifice unto the Lord our God: And, I am fure that the King of Egypt will not let you go. So our bleffed Saviour, the Evening wherein he was betrayed, knew that Peter would shamefully deny him, before the Morning; for he declares it to him with Affeverations, to fliew the Certainty of it; and tells the Disciples, that all of them should be offended fended because of him that Night; Matt. xxvi. 31,----35. John xiii. 38. Luke xxii. 31,---34. John xvi. 32. And yet it was their Duty to avoid these Things; they were very finful Things, which God had forbidden, and which it was their Duty to watch and pray against; and they were obliged to do fo from the Counsels and Persuasions Christ used with them, at that very Time, so to do; Matt. xxvi. 41. Watch and pray, that ye enter not into Temptation. So that whatever Difficulty there can be in this Matter, it can be no Objection against any Principles which have been maintain'd in Opposition to the Principles of Arminians; nor does it any more concern me to remove the Difficulty, than it does them, or indeed all that call themselves Christians, and acknowledge the divine Authority of the Scriptures.—Nevertheless, this Matter may possibly (God allowing) be more particularly and largely considered, in Some future Discourse, on the Doctrine of Predestination.

But I would here observe, that however the Desenders of that Notion of Liberty of Will, which I have opposed, exclaim against the Doctrine of Calvinists, as tending to bring Men into Doubts concerning the moral Perfections of God; it is their Scheme, and not the Scheme of Calvinists, that indeed is justly chargeable with this. For 'tis one of the most fundamental Points of their Scheme of Things, that a Freedom of Will, consisting in self-determination, without all Necessity, is essential to Moral Agency. This is the same Thing as to say, that such a Determination of the Will without all Necessity, must be in all intelligent Beings, in those Things, wherein they are meral Agency, or in their moral Ass: And from this it will follow, that God's Will is not necessarily farily determined, in any Thing he does, as a moral Agent, or in any of his Acts that are of a moral Nature. So that in all Things, wherein he acts bolily, justly and truly, he don't act necessarily; or his Will is not necessarily determined to act holily and justly; because if it were necessarily determined, he would not be a moral Agent in thus acting: His Will would be attended with Necessity; which they fay is inconfiftent with moral Agency: "He can act no otherwise; He is at no Liberty " in the Affair; He is determined by unavoid-" able invincible Necessity: Therefore such A-" gency is no moral Agency; yea, no Agency at " all, properly fpeaking: A necessary Agent is " no Agent: He being passive, and subject to " Necessity, what He does is no Act of his, but " an Effect of a Necessity prior to any Act of "his." This is agreable to their Manner of arguing. Now then what is become of all our Proof of the moral Perfections of God? How can we prove, that God certainly will in any one Instance do that which is just and holy; feeing his Will is determin'd in the Matter by no Necelfity? We have no other Way of proving that any Thing certainly will be, but only by the Necessity of the Event. Where we can fee no Necessity, but that the Thing may be, or may not be, there we are unavoidably left at a Loss. We have no other Way properly and truly to demonstrate the moral Perfections of God, but the Way that Mr. Chubb proves them, in P. 252, 261, 262, 263. of his Tracts, viz. That God must necessarily perfeetly know what is most worthy and valuable in it felf, which in the Nature of Things is best and fittest to be done. And as this is most eligible in it self, He being omniscient, must see it to be so; and being both omniscient and self-sufficient, cannot have any Temptation to reject it; and so must necessarily 384 Of Arminian Arguments, &c. Part IV. necessarily will that which is best. And thus, by this Necessity of the Determination of God's Will to what is good and best, we demonstrably establish God's moral Character.

Corol. From Things which have been observed, it appears, that most of the Arguments from Scripture, which Arminians make use of to support their Scheme, are no other than begging the Question. For in these their Arguments they determine in the first Place, that without such a Freedom of Will as they hold, Men can't be proper moral Agents, nor the Subjects of Command, Counfel, Perfuasion, Invitation, Promises, Threatnings, Expostulations, Rewards and Punishments; and that without fuch Freedom 'tis to no Purpole for Men to take any Care, or use any Diligence, Endeavours or Means, in order to their avoiding Sin, or becoming holy, escaping Punishment or obtaining Happiness: and having supposed these Things, which are grand Things in Question in the Debate, then they heap up Scriptures containing Commands, Counfels, Calls, Warnings, Perfuations, Expostulations, Promises and Threatnings; (as doubtless they may find enough such; the Bible is confessedly full of them, from the Beginning to the End) and then they glory, how full the Scripture is on their Side, how many more Texts there are that evidently favour their Scheme, than fuch as feem to favour the contrary. But let them first make manifest the Things in Question, which they fuppose and take for granted, and shew them to be confiftent with themselves, and produce clear Evidence of their Truth; and they have gain'd their Point, as all will confess, without bringing one Scripture. For none denies, that there are Commands, Counfels, Promises, Threatnings, &c. in the Bible. But unless they do these Things, Sect. XII. Whether these Principles, &c. 385 their multiplying such Texts of Scripture is infignificant and vain.

It may further be observed, that such Scriptures as they bring, are really against them, and not for them. As it has been demonstrated, that 'tis their Scheme, and not ours, that is inconsistent with the Use of Motives and Persuasives, or any moral Means whatsoever, to induce Men to the Practice of Vertue, or abstaining from Wickedness: Their Principles, and not ours, are repugnant to moral Agency, and inconsistent with moral Government, with Law or Precept, with the Nature of Vertue or Vice, Reward or Punishment, and with every Thing whatsoever of a moral Nature, either on the Part of the moral Governor, or in the State, Actions or Conduct of the Subject.

SECTION XII.

Of a supposed Tendency of these Principles to Atheism and Licentiousness.

F any object against what has been maintain'd, that it tends to Atheism; I know not on what Grounds such an Objection can be raised, unless it be that some Atheists have held a Doctrine of Necessity which they suppose to be like this. But if it be so, I am persuaded the Arminians would not look upon it just, that their Notion of Freedom and Contingence should be charged with a Tendency to all the Errors that ever any embraced, who have held such Opinions. The Stoic Philosophers, whom the Calvinists are charged with agreeing with, were no Atheists, but the greatest Theists, and nearest a-kin to Christians in their C c

Opinions concerning the Unity and the Perfections of the Godhead, of all the Heathen Philosophers-And Epicurus, that chief Father of Atheism, maintain'd no such Doctrine of Necessity, but was the greatest Maintainer of Contingence.

The Doctrine of Necessity, which supposes a necessary Connection of all Events, on some antecedent Ground and Reason of their Existence, is the only Medium we have to prove the Being of God. And the contrary Doctrine of Contingence, even as maintain'd by Arminians (which certainly implies or infers, that Events may come into Existence, or begin to be, without Dependence on any Thing foregoing, as their Cause, Ground or Reason) takes away all Proof of the Being of God; which Proof is fummarily express'd by the Apostle, in Rom. i. 20. And this is a Tendency to Atheism with a Witness. So that indeed it is the Doctrine of Arminians, and not of the Calvinists, that is justly charged with a Tendency to Atheism; it being built on a Foundation that is the utter Subversion of every demonstrative Argument for the Proof of a Deity; as has been shown, Part. II. Sect. III.

And whereas it has often been faid, that the Calvinific Doctrine of Necessity, saps the Foundations of all Religion and Vertue, and tends to the greatest Licentiousness of Practice: This Objection is built on the Pretence, that our Doctrine tenders vain all Means and Endeavours, in order to be vertuous and religious. Which Pretence has been already particularly considered in the 5th Section of this Part; where it has been demonstrated, that this Doctrine has no such Tendency; but that such a Tendency is truly to be charged on the contrary Doctrine: inasmuch as the Notion tion of Contingence, which their Doctrine implies, in its certain Confequences, overthrows all Connection, in every Degree, between Endeavour and Event Means and End.

And besides, if many other Things which have been observed to belong to the Arminian Doctrine, or to be plain Consequences of it, be considered, there will appear just Reason to suppose that it is that, which must rather tend to Licentiousness. Their Doctrine excuses all evil Inclinations, which Men find to be natural; because in such Inclinations, they are not felf-determined, as fuch Inclinations are not owing to any Choice or Determination of their own Wills. Which leads Men wholly to justify themselves in all their wicked Actions, fo far as natural Inclination has had a Hand in determining their Wills, to the Commission of them. Yea, these Notions which suppose moral Necessity and Inability to be inconfiftent with Blame or moral Obligation, will directly lead Men to justify the vilest Acts and Practices, from the Strength of their wicked Inclinations of all Sorts; strong Inclinations inducing a moral Necessity; yea, to excuse every Degree of evil Inclination, so far as this has evidently prevailed, and been the Thing which has determined their Wills: Because, so far as antecedent Inclination determined the Will, fo far the Will was without Liberty of Indifference and Self-determi-Which at last will come to this, that Men will justify themselves in all the Wickedness they commit. It has been observed already, that this Scheme of Things does exceedingly diminish the Guilt of Sin, and the Difference between the greatest and smallest Offences; * And if it be purfued in its real Confequences, it leaves Room C c 2 íor for no fuch Thing, as either Vertue or Vice, Blame or Praise in the World. † And then again, how naturally does this Notion of the sovereign felf-determining Power of the Will, in all Things, vertuous or vicious, and whatsoever deserves either Reward or Punishment, tend to encourage Men to put off the Work of Religion and Vertue, and turning from Sin to God; it being that which they have a sovereign Power to determine themselves to, just when they please; or if not, they are wholly excusable in going on in Sin, because of their Inability to do any other.

If it should be said, that the Tendency of this Doctrine of Necessity, to Licentiousness, appears by the Improvement many at this Day actually make of it, to justify themselves in their dissolute Courses; I will not deny that some Men do unreasonably abuse this Doctrine, as they do many other Things which are true and excellent in their own Nature: But I deny that this proves, the Doctrine itself has any Tendency to Licenticusness. I think, the Tendency of Doctrines, by what now appears in the World, and in our Nation in particular, may much more justly be argued from the general Effect which has been feen to attend the prevailing of the Principles of Arminians, and the contrary Principles; as both have had their Turn of general Prevalence in our Nation. If it be indeed, as is pretended, that Calvinific Doctrines undermine the very Foundation of all Religion and Morality, and enervate and difannul all rational Motives, to holy and vertuous Practice; and that the contrary Doctrines give the Inducements to Vertue and Goodness their proper Force, and exhibit Religion in a rational tional Light, tending to recommend it to the Reason of Mankind, and enforce it in a Manner that is agreable to their natural Notions of Things: I fay, if it be thus, 'tis remarkable, that Vertue and religious Practice should prevail most, when the former Doctrines, so inconsistent with it, prevailed almost universally: And that ever fince the latter Doctrines, fo happily agreeing with it, and of fo proper and excellent a Tendency to promote it, have been gradually prevailing, Vice, Prophaneness, Luxury and Wickednels of all Sorts, and Contempt of all Religion, and of every Kind of Seriousness and Strictness of Conversation, should proportionably prevail; and that these Things should thus accompany one another, and rife and prevail one with another, now for a whole Age together. 'Tis remarkable, that this happy Remedy (discover'd by the free Enquiries, and fuperior Sense and Wisdom of this Age) against the pernicious Effects of Calvinism, so inconsistent with Religion, and tending fo much to banish all Vertue from the Earth, should on so long a Trial, be attended with no good Effect; but that the Confequence should be the Reverse of Amendment; that in Proportion, as the Remedy takes Place, and is thoroughly applied, fo the Difease should prevail; and the very fame difmal Effect take Place, to the highest Degree, which Calvinific Doctrines are supposed to have so great a Tendency to; even the banishing of Religion and Vertue, and the prevailing of unbounded Licentiousness of Manners. If these Things are truly fo, they are very remarkable, and Matter of very curious Speculation.

SECTION XIII.

Concerning that Objection against the Reasoning, by which the Calvinistic Doctrine is supported, that it is Metaphysical and Abstruse.

T has often been objected against the Desenders of Calvinistic Principles, that in their Reafonings, they run into nice Scholastic Distinctions, and abstruse metaphysical Subtilties, and fet these in Opposition to common Sense. And 'tis possible, that after the former Manner it may be alledged against the Reasoning by which I have endeavoured to confute the Arminian Scheme of Liberty and moral Agency, that it is very abstracted and metaphyfical .--- Concerning this, I would observe the following Things.

I. If that be made an Objection against the foregoing Reasoning, that it is metaphysical, or may properly be reduced to the Science of Metaphyficks, it is a very impertinent Objection; whether it be so or no, is not worthy of any Dispute or Controversy. If the Reasoning be good. 'tis as frivolous to enquire what Science it is properly reduc'd to, as what Language it is delivered in: And for a Man to go about to confute the Arguments of his Opponent, by telling him, his Arguments are Metaphylical, would be as weak as to tell him, his Arguments could not be substantial, because they were written in French or Latin. The Question is not, Whether what is faid be Metaphyficks, Phyficks, Logick, or Mathematicks, Latin, French, English, or Mohawk? But, Whether the Reasoning be good, and the Arguments truly conclusive? The foregoing Arguments are no more metaphyfical, than those which we use against the Papists, to disprove their Doctrine of Transubstantiation; alledging, it is inconsistent with the Notion of corporeal Identity, that it should be in ten Thousand Places at the same Time. 'Tis by metaphyfical Arguments only we are able to prove, that the rational Soul is not corporeal; that Lead or Sand can't think; that Thoughts are not fquare or round, or don't weigh a Pound. The Arguments by which we prove the Being of God, if handled closely and distinctly, so as to shew their clear and demonstrative Evidence, must be metaphysically treated. 'Tis by Metaphylicks only, thatwe can demonstrate, that God is not limited to a Place, or is not mutable; that he is not ignorant, or forgetful; that it is impossible for him to lie, or be unjust; and that there is one God only, and not Hundreds or Thousands. And indeed we have no strict Demonstration of any Thing, excepting mathematical Truths, but by Metaphylicks. We can have no Proof, that is properly demonstrative, of any one Proposition, relating to the Being and Nature of God, his Creation of the World, the Dependence of all Things on him, the Nature of Bodies or Spirits, the Nature of our own Souls, or any of the great Truths of Morality and natural Religion, but what is metaphyfical. willing, my Arguments should be brought to the Test of the strictest and justest Reason, and that a clear, distinct and determinate Meaning of the Terms I use, should be insisted on; but let not the Whole be rejected, as if all were confuted, by fixing on it the Epithet Metaphylical.

II. If the Reasoning which has been made use of, be in some Sense Metaphysical, it will not solve, C c 4 low, low, that therefore it must needs be abstruse, unintelligible, and a-kin to the Jargon of the Schools. I humbly conceive, the foregoing Reasoning, at least to those Things which are most material belonging to it, depends on no abstruse Definitions or Distinctions, or Terms without a Meaning, or of very ambiguous and undetermined Signification, or any Points of fuch Abstraction and Subtilty, as tends to involve the attentive Understanding in Clouds and Darkness. There is no high Degree of Refinement and abstruse Speculation, in determining, that a Thing is not before it is, and so can't be the Cause of itself; or that the first Act of tree Choice, has not another Act of free Choice going before that, to excite or direct it; or in determining, that no Choice is made, while the Mind remains in a State of absolute Indifference; that Preference and Equilibrium never co-exist; and that therefore no Choice is made in a State of Liberty, confifting in Indifference: And that fo far as the Will is determined by Motives, exhibited and operating previous to the A& of the Will, fo far it is not determined by the Act of the Will itself; that nothing can begin to be, which before was not, without a Cause, or fome antecedent Ground or Reason, why it then begins to be; that Effects depend on their Caufes, and are connected with them; that Vertue is not the worfe, nor Sin the better, for the Strength of Inclination, with which it is practifed, and the Difficulty which thence arises of doing otherwise; that when it is already infallably known, that the Thing will be, it is not a Thing contingent whether it will ever be or no; or that it can be truly faid, notwithstanding, that it is not necessary it should be, but it either may be, or may not be. And the like might be oble ved of many other Things Sect. XIII. and abstruse Reasoning. 393 Things which belong to the foregoing Reasoning.

If any shall still stand to it, that the foregoing Reasoning is nothing but metaphysical Sophistry; and that it must be so, that the seeming Force of the Arguments all depends on some Fallacy and Wile that is hid in the Obscurity, which always attends a great Degree of metaphyfical Abstraction and Refinement; and shall be ready to fay, " Here is indeed fomething that tends to con-" found the Mind, but not to fatisfy it: For who " can ever be truly fatisfied in it, that Men are " fitly blamed or commended, punished or rewarded for those Volitions which are not from " themselves, and of whose Existence they are " not the Causes. Men may refine, as much as " they please, and advance their abstract Noti-" ons, and make out a Thousand seeming Con-" tradictions, to puzzle our Understandings; yet there can be no Satisfaction in fuch Doctrine as this: The natural Sense of the Mind of Man " will always refift it." * I humbly conceive, that

^{*} A certain noted Author of the present Age says, The Arguments for Necessity are nothing but Quibbling, or Logomachy, asing Words without a Meaning, or Begging the Question.—I don't know what Kind of Necessity any Authors he may have Reference to, are Advocates for; or whether they have managed their Arguments well, or ill. As to the Arguments I have made use of, if they are Quibbles, they may be shewn so: such Knots are capable of being untied, and the Trick and Cheat may be detected and plainly laid open. If this be fairly done, with Respect to the Grounds and Reasons I have relied upon, I shall have just Occasion for the future to be shent, if not to be assumed of my Argumenta ions. I am willing, my Proofs should be thoroughly examined; and if there be nothing but Begging the Question, or meer Logomachy, or Dispute of Words, let it be made manifest, and shewn how the seeming Strength fuch an Objector, if he has Capacity and Humility and Calmness of Spirit, sufficient impartially and thoroughly to examine himself, will find that he knows not really what he would be at; and indeed his Difficulty is nothing but a meer Prejudice, from an inadvertent customary Use of Words, in a Meaning that is not clearly understood, of the Argument depends on my using Words without a Meaning, or arises from the Ambiguity of Terms, or my making use of Words in an indeterminate and unsteady Manner; and that the Weight of my Reasons rest mainly on such a Foundation: And then, I shall either be ready to retract what I have urged, and thank the Man that has done the kind Part, or shall be justly exposed for my Obstinacy.

The same Author is abundant in appealing, in this Affair, from what he calls Logomachy and Sophistry, to Experience. A Person can experience only what passes in his own Mind. But yet, as we may well suppose, that all Men have the same human Faculties; so a Man may well argue from his own Experience to that of others, in Things that shew the Nature of those Faculties, and the Manner of their Operation. But then one has as good Right to alledge his Experience, as another. As to my own Experience, I find, that in innumerable Things I can do as I will; that the Motions of my Body, in many Respects, inflantaneously follow the Acts of my Will concerning those Motions; and that my Will has some Command of my Thoughts; and that the Acts of my Will are my own, i. ϵ . that they are Acts of my Will, the Volitions of my own Mind; or in other Words, that what I will, I will. Which, I prefume, is the Sum of what others experience in this Affair. But as to finding by Experience, that my Will is originally determin'd by it felf; or that my Will first chusing what Volition there shall be, the chosen Volition accordingly follows; and that this is the first Rise of the Determination of my Will in any Affair; or that any Volition arises in my Mind contingently; I declare, I know nothing in myself, by Experience, of this Nature; and nothing that ever I experienced, carries the least Appearance or Shadow of any such Thing, or gives me any more Reason to suppose or suspect any such Thing, than to suppose that my Volitions existed twenty Years before they existed. 'Tis true, I find my self posses'd of my Volitions before I can see the effectual Power of any Cause to produce them (for the Power and Efficacy of the Cause is not seen flood, nor carefully reflected upon. — Let the Objector reflect again, if he has Candor and Patience enough, and don't fcorn to be at the Trouble of close Attention in the Affair. - He would have a Man's Volition be from himself. Let it be from bimself, most primarily and originally of any Way conceivable; that is, from his own Choice: How will that help the Matter, as to his being justly blamed or praised, unless that Choice itself be blame or praise-worthy? And how is the Choice itself (an ill Choice, for Instance) blame-worthy, according to these Principles, unless that be from himself too, in the same Manner; that is, from his own Choice? But the original and first-determining Choice in the Affair is not from his Choice: His Choice is not the Cause of it. —— And if it be from himfelf fome other Way, and not from his Choice, furely that will not help the Matter: If it ben't from himself of Choice, then it is not from himfelf voluntarily; and if fo, he is furely no more to blame, than if it were not from himfelf at all. It is a Vanity, to pretend it is a fufficient Answer to this, to say, that it is nothing but metaphyfical Refinement and Subtilty, and fo attended with Obscurity and Uncertainty.

If it be the natural Sense of our Minds, that what is blame worthy in a Man must be from himself, then it doubtless is also, that it must be from something bad in himself, a bad Choice, or bad but by the Effect) and this, for ought I know, may make some imagine, that Volition has no Cause, or that it produces itself. But I have no more Reason from hence to determine any such Thing, than I have to determine that I gave my self my own Being, or that I came into being accidentally without a Cause, because I first found my self possessed of Being, before I had Knowledge of a Cause of my Being.

bad Disposition. But then our natural Sense is, that this bad Choice or Disposition is evil in it [elf, and the Man blame worthy for it, on it's own Account, without taking into our Notion of it's Blameworthiness, another bad Choice, or Disposition going before this, from whence this arifes: for that is a ridiculous Abfurdity, running us into an immediate Contradiction, which our natural Sense of Blame-worthiness has nothing to do with, and never comes into the Mind, nor is supposed in the Judgment we naturally make of the Affair. was demonstrated before, natural Sense don't place the moral Evil of Volitions and Dispositions in the Cause of them, but the Nature of them. An evil Thing's being FROM a Man, or from fomething antecedent in him, is not effential to the original Notion we have of Blame-worthiness: But 'tis it's being the Choice of the Heart; as appears by this, that if a Thing be from us, and not from our Choice, it has not the Nature of Blame-worthiness or Ill-defert, according to our natural Sense. When a Thing is from a Man, in that Senfe, that it is from his Will or Choice, he is to blame for it, because his Will is IN IT: So far as the Will is in it, Blame is in it, and no further. Neither do we go any further in our Notion of Blame, to enquire whether the bad Will be FROM a bad Will: There is no Confideration of the Original of that bad Will; because according to our natural Apprehension, Blame originally confifts in it. Therefore a Thing's being from a Man, is a fecondary Confideration, in the Notion of Blame or Ill-desert. Because those Things in our external Actions, are most properly faid to be from us, which are from our Choice; and no other external Actions but those that are from us in this Sense, have the Nature of Blame; and

and they indeed, not so properly because they are from us, as because we are in them, i. e. our Wills are in them; not so much because they are from some Property of ours, as because they are our Properties.

However, all these external Actions being truly from us, as their Cause; and we being so used, in ordinary Speech, and in the common Affairs of Life, to speak of Men's Actions and Conduct that we see, and that affect human Society, as deserving Ill or Well, as worthy of Blame or Praise; hence it is come to pass, that Philosophers have incautiously taken all their Measures of Good and Evil, Praise and Blame, from the Dictates of common Sense, about these overt Ass of Men; to the running of every Thing into the most lamentable and dreadful Consusion. And therefore I observe,

III. 'Tis fo far from being true (whatever may be pretended) that the Proof of the Doctrine which has been maintain'd, depends on certain abstruse, unintelligible, metaphysical Terms and Notions; and that the Arminian Scheme, without needing fuch Clouds and Darkness for it's Defence, is supported by the plain Distates of common Sense; that the very Reverse is most certainly true, and that to a great Degree. 'Tis Fact, that they, and not we, have confounded Things with metaphyfical, unintelligible Notions and Phrases, and have drawn them from the Light of plain Truth, into the gross Darkness of abstrute metaphyfical Propositions, and Words without a Meaning. Their pretended Demonstrations de-pend very much on such unintelligible, metaphysical Phrases, as Self-determination, and Sovereignty of the Will; and the metaphytical Sense they put on fuch Terms, as Necessity, Contingency, Action.

Action, Agency, &c. quite diverse from their Meaning as used in common Speech; and which, as they use them, are without any consistent Meaning, or any Manner of distinct consistent Ideas; as far from it as any of the abstruse Terms and perplexed Phrases of the Peripatetick Philosophers, or the most unintelligible Jargon of the Schools, or the Cant of the wildest Fanaticks. Yea, we may be bold to fay, these metaphysical Terms, on which they build fo much, are what they use without knowing what they mean themfelves; they are pure metaphyfical Sounds, without any Ideas whatfoever in their Minds to anfwer them; in-s-much as it has been demonstrated, that there cannot be any Notion in the Mind confistent with these Expressions, as they pretend to explain them; because their Explanations dethroy themselves. No such Notions as imply Selfcontradiction, and Self-abolition, and this a great many Ways, can subsist in the Mind; as there can be no Idea of a Whole which is less than any of it's Parts, or of folid Extension without Dimensions, or of an Effect which is before it's Cause. — Arminians improve these Terms, as Terms of Art, and in their metaphyfical Meaning, to advance and establish those Things which are contrary to common Sense, in a high Degree. Thus, instead of the plain vulgar Notion of Liberty, which all Mankind, in every Part of the Face of the Earth, and in all Ages, have; confifting in Opportunity to do as one pleases; they have introduced a new strange Liberty, confifting in Indifference, Contingence, and Self-determination; by which they involve themselves and others in great Obscurity, and manifold gross Inconfishence. So, instead of placing Vertue and Vice, as common Sense places them very much, in fix'd Bias and Inclination, and greater Vertue and Vice in stronger and more establish'd Inclination; these, through their Refinings and abstruse Notions, suppose a Liberty confisting in Indifference, to be effential to all Vertue and Vice. So they have reasoned themselves, not by metaphyfical Distinctions, but metaphyfical Confufion, into many Principles about moral Agency, Blame, Praise, Reward and Punishment, which are, as has been shewn, exceeding contrary to the common Sense of Mankind; and perhaps to their own Sense, which governs them in common Life.

CONCLUSION.

HETHER the Things which have been ailedged are liable to ailedged, are liable to any tolerable Anfwer in the Ways of calm, intelligible and strict Reasoning, I must leave others to judge: But I ant fenfible they are liable to one Sort of Answer. 'Tis not unlikely, that fome who value themselves on the supposed rational and generous Principles of the modern fashionable Divinity, will have their Indignation and Difcain raifed at the Sight of this Discourse, and on perceiving what Things are pretended to be proved in it. And if they think it worthy of being read, or of fo much Notice as to fay much about it, they may probably renew the usual Exclamations, with additional Vehemence and Contempt, about the Fate of the Heathen, Hobbes's Necessity, and making Men meer Machines; accumulating the terrible Epithets of jaicl, unfrustrable, inevitable, irresistible, &c. and it may be, with the Addition of borrid and blafphemous; and perhaps much Skill may be used to fet forth Things which have been faid, in Colours which shall be shocking to the Imaginations, and moving to the Passions of those who have either too little Capacity, or too much Confidence of the Opinions Opinions they have imbibed, and Contempt of the contrary, to try the Matter by any ferious and circumfpect Examination. + Or Difficulties may be ftarted and infifted on which don't belong to the Controversy; because, let them be more or less real, and hard to be resolved, they are not what are owing to any Thing diftinguishing of this Scheme from that of the Arminians, and would not be removed nor diminished by renouncing the former, and adhering to the latter. Or fome particular Things may be pick'd out, which they inay think will found harshest in the Ears of the Generality; and these may be gloss'd and descanted on, with tart and contemptuous Words; and from thence, the whole treated with Triumph and Infult.

'Tis easy to see how the Decision of most of the Points in Controversy, between Calvinists and Arminians, depends on the Determination of this grand Article concerning the Freedom of the Will requisite to moral Agency; and that by clearing and establishing

• † A Writer, of the present Age, whom I have several Times had Occasion to mention, speaks once and again of those who hold the Doctrine of Necessity, as scarcely worthy of the Name of Philesophers .- I don't know, whether he has respect to any particular Notion of Necessity, that some may have maintain'd; and if so, what Doctrine of Necessity it is that He means. - Whether I am worthy of the Name of a Philofopher, or not, would be a Question little to the present Purpose. If any, and ever so many, should deny it, I should not think it worth the while to enter into a Dispute on that Question; tho' at the same Time I might expen, some better Answer should be given to the Arguments brought for the Truth of the Doctrine I maintain; and I might further reasonably desire, that it might be confidered, whether it don't become those who are truly worthy of the Name of Philosophers, to be fensible, that there is a Difference between Argument and Contempt; yea, and a Difference between the Contempt.bleness of the Person that argues, and the Inconclusiveness of the Arguments he orfers.

blishing the Calvinistic Doctrine in this Point, the chief Arguments are obviated, by which Arminian Doctrines in general are supported, and the contrary Doctrines demonstratively confirmed. Hereby it becomes manifest, that God's moral Government over Mankind, his treating them as moral Agents, making them the Objects of his Commands, Counsels, Calls, Warnings, Expostulations, Promifes, Threatnings, Rewards and Punishments, is not inconsistent with a determining Disposal of all Events, of every Kind, throughout the Universe, in his Providence; either by positive Efficiency, or Permission. Indeed such an univerfal, determining Providence, infers some Kind of Neceffity of all Events, fuch a Necessity as implies an infallible previous Fixedness of the Futurity of the Event: But no other Necessity of moral Events, or Volitions of intelligent Agents, is needful in order to this, than moral Necessity; which does as much ascertain the Futurity of the Event, as any other Necessity. But, as has been demon-firated, such a Necessity is not at all repugnant to moral Agency, and the reasonable Use of Commands, Calls, Rewards, Punishments, &c. Yea, not only are Objections of this Kind against the Doctrine of an universal determining Providence, removed by what has been faid; but the Truth of fuch a Doctrine is demonstrated. As it has been demonstrated, that the Futurity of all future Events is established by previous Necessity, either natural or moral; fo 'tis manifest, that the fovereign Creator and Disposer of the World has ordered this Necessity, by ordering his own Conduct, either in defignedly acting, or forbearing to act. For, as the Being of the World is from God, to the Circumstances in which it had it's Being at first, both negative and positive, must be ordered by him, in one of these Ways; and all the necesfarv fary Confequences of these Circumstances, must be ordered by him. And God's active and positive Interpolitions, after the World was created, and the Consequences of these Interpositions; also every Instance of his forbearing to interpose, and the fure Confequences of this Forbearance, must all be determined according to his Pleasure. And therefore every Event which is the Confequence of any Thing whatfoever, or that is connected with any foregoing Thing or Circumstance, either positive or negative, as the Ground or Reason of its Existence, must be ordered of God; either by a defigned Efficiency and Interpolition, or a defigned forbearing to operate or interpole. But, as has been proved, all Events whatfoever are neceffarily connected with fomething foregoing, either positive or negative, which is the Ground of its Existence. It follows therefore, that the whole Series of Events is thus connected with fomething in the State of Things, either positive or negative, which is original in the Series; i. e. fomething which is connected with nothing preceding that, but God's own immediate Conduct, either his acting or forbearing to act. From whence it follows, that as God defignedly orders his own Conduct, and its connected Consequences, it must necessarily be, that he defignedly orders all Things.

The Things which have been faid, obviate fome of the chief Objections of Arminians against the Calvinistic Doctrine of the total Depravity and Corruption of Man's Nature, whereby his Heart is wholly under the Power of Sin, and he is utterly unable, without the Interposition of sovereign Grace, savingly to love God, believe in Christ, or do any Thing that is truly good and acceptable in God's Sight. For the main Objection against this Doctrine is, that it is inconsistent with the

404 The CONCLUSION.

Freedom of Man's Will, confifting in Indifference and felf-determining Power; because it supposes Man to be under a Necessity of Sinning, and that God requires Things of him, in order to his avoiding eternal Damnation, which he is unable to do; and that this Doctrine is wholly inconsistent with the Sincerity of Counfels, Invitations, &c. Now this Doctrine supposes no other Necessity of Sinning, than a moral Necessity; which, as has been shewn, don't at all excuse Sin; and supposes no other Inability to obey any Command, or perform any Duty, even the most spiritual and exalted, but a moral Inability, which, as has been proved, don't excuse Persons in the Non-persormance of any good Thing, or make 'cm not to be the proper Objects of Commands, Counsels and Invitations. And moreover, it has been shewn, that there is not, and never can be, either in Existence, or so much as in Idea, any fuch Freedom of Will, confifting in Indifference and Self-determination, for the Sake of which, this Dostrine of original Sin is cast out; and that no such Freedom is necessary, in order to the Nature of Sin, and a just Defert of Punishment.

The Things which have been observed, do also take off the main Objections of Arminians against the Doct.ine of efficacious Grace; and at the same Time, prove the Grace of God in a Sinner's Conversion (if there be any Grace or divine Instuence in the Affair) to be efficacious, yea, and irrespstible too, if by irresistible is meant, that which is attended with a moral Necessity, which it is impossible should ever be violated by any Resistance. The main Objection of Arminians against this Doctrine is, that it is inconsistent with their self-determining Freedom of Will; and that it is repugnant to the Nature of Vertue, that it should be wrought wrought in the Heart by the determining Efficacy and Power of another, instead of its being owing to a felf-moving Power; that in that Case, the Good which is wrought, would not be our Vertue, but rather God's Vertue; because it is not the Perfon in whom it is wrought, that is the determining Author of it, but God that wrought it in him. But the Things which are the Foundation of these Objections, have been confidered; and it has been demonstrated, that the Liberty of moral Agents does not confift in felf-determining Power; and that there is no Need of any fuch Liberty, in order to the Nature of Vertue; nor does it at all hinder, but that the State or Act of the Will may be the Vertue of the Subject, though it be not from Self-determination, but the Determination of an intrinsic Cause; even so as to cause the Event to be morally necessary to the Subject of it. And as it has been proved, that nothing in the State or Acts of the Will of Man is contingent; but that on the contrary, every Event of this Kind is neceffiry, by a moral Necessity; and has also been now demonstrated, that the Doctrine of an univerfal determining Providence, follows from that Doctrine of Necessity, which was proved before: And fo, that God does decifively, in his Providence, order all the Volitions of moral Agents, either by positive Influence or Permission: And it being allowed on all Hands, that what God does in the Affair of Man's vertuous Volitions, whether it be more or lefs, is by fome positive Influence, and not by meer Permission, as in the Affair of a finful Volition: If we put these Things together, it will follow, that God's Affiftance or Influence, must be determining and decisive, or must be attended with a moral Necessity of the Event; and fo, that God gives Vertue, Holines's and Conversion to Sinners, by an Influence which determines the Effect, in fuch a Manner, that the Effect will infallibly follow by a moral Necessity; which is what Calvinifts mean by efficacious and irrefishble Grace.

The Things which have been faid, do likewife answer the chief Objections against the Doctrine of God's universal and absolute Decree, and afford infallible Proof of that Doctrine; and of the Doctrine of absolute, eternal, personal Election in particular. The main Objections against these Doctrines are, that they infer a Necessity of the Volitions of moral Agents, and of the future moral State and Acts of Men; and so are not consistent with those eternal Rewards and Punishments, which are connected with Conversion and Impenitence; nor can be made to agree with the Reafonableness and Sincerity of the Precepts, Calls, Counsels, Warnings and Exposulations of the Word of God; or with the various Methods and Means of Grace, which God uses with Sinners, to bring 'em to Repentance; and the whole of that moral Government, which God exercises towards Mankind: And that they infer an Inconfiftence between the secret and revealed Will of God; and make God the Author of Sin. But all these Things have been obviated in the preceeding Discourse. And the certain Truth of these Doctrines, concerning God's eternal Purpofes, will follow from what was just now observed concerning God's univerfal Providence; how it infallibly tollows from what has been proved, that God orders all Events, and the Volitions of moral Agents amongst others, by fuch a decifive Difpofal, that the Events are infallibly connected with his Disposal. For if God disposes all Events, so that the infallible Existence of the Events is decided by his Providence, then he doubtless thus orders and decides Things knowingly, and on Design. God don't do what he does, nor order what he orders, accidentally and unawares; either without, or beside his Intention. And if there be a foregoing Design of doing and ordering as he does, this is the same with a Purpose or Decree. And as it has been shewn, that nothing is new to God, in any Respect, but all Things are perfectly and equally in his View from Eternity; hence it will follow, that his Designs or Purposes are not Things formed anew, founded on any new Views or Appearances, but are all eternal Purpofes. And as it has been now shewn, how the Doctrine of determining efficacious Grace certainly follows from Things proved in the foregoing Discourse; hence will necessarily follow the Doctrine of particular, eternal, absolute Election. For if Men are made true Saints, no otherwife than as God makes 'em fo, and distinguishes 'em from others, by an efficacious Power and Influence of his, that decides and fixes the Event; and God thus makes fome Saints, and not others, on Defign or Purpose, and (as has been now observed) no Defigns of God are new; it follows, that God thus diftinguished from others, all that ever become true Saints, by his eternal Design or Decree. I might also shew, how God's certain Foreknowledge must suppose an absolute Decree, and how fuch a Decree can be proved to a Demonstration from it: But that this Discourse mayn't be lengthen'd out too much, that must be omitted for the present.

From these Things it will inevitably follow, that however Christ in some Sense may be said to die for all, and to redeem all visible Christians, yea the whole World by his Death; yet there must be something particular in the Design of his Death, with Respect to such as He intended should actu-D d 4 ally ally be faved thereby. As appears by what has been now shewn, God has the actual Salvation or Redemption of a certain Number in his proper abfolute Defign, and of a certain Number only; and therefore such a Design only can be prosecuted in any Thing God does, in order to the Salvation of Men. God pursues a proper Design of the Salvation of the Elect in giving Christ to die, and profecutes fuch a Defign with Respect to no other, most strictly speaking; for 'tis impossible, that God should profecute any other Design than only fuch as He has: He certainly don't, in the highest Propriety and Strictness of Speech, pursue a Design that he has not. --- And indeed such a Particularity and Limitation of Redemption will as infallibly follow from the Doctrine of God's . Foreknowledge, as from that of the Decree. For 'tis as impossible, in Strictness of Speech, that God should prosecute a Design, or Aim at a Thing, which He at the same Time most perfectly knows will not be accomplished, as that he should use Endeavours for that which is beside his Decree.

By the Things which have been proved, are obviated some of the main Objections against the Doctrine of the infallible and necessary Perseverance of Saints, and some of the main Foundations of this Doctrine are established. The main Prejudices of Arminians against this Doctrine seem to be these; they suppose such a necessary, infallible Perseverance to be repugnant to the Freedom of the Will; that it must be owing to Man's own self-determining Fower, that he such becomes vertuous and holy; and so in like Manner, it must be left a Thing contingent, to be determined by the same Freedom of Will, whether he will persever in Vertue and Holiness; and that otherwise his continuing steelsalt in Faith and Obedience would not be his Vertue, or at all Praife-worthy and Rewardable; nor could his Perseverance be properly the Matter of divine Commands, Counfels and Promifes, nor his Apostacy be properly threaten'd, and Men warned against it. Whereas we find all these Things in Scripture: There we find Stedfastness and Perseverance in true Christianity, represented as the Vertue of the Saints, spoken of as Praise worthy in them, and glorious Rewards promised to it; and also find, that God makes it the Subject of his Commands, Counfels and Promises; and the contrary, of Threatnings and Warnings. But the Foundation of these Objections has been removed, in it's being shewn that moral Necessity and infallible Certainty of Events is not inconfistent with these Things; and that, as to Freedom of Will lying in the Power of the Will to determine it felf, there neither is any fuch Thing, nor any Need of it, in order to Vertue, Reward, Commands, Counfels, &c.

And as the Doctrines of efficacious Grace and absolute Election do certainly follow from Things which have been proved in the preceeding Difcourse; so some of the main Foundations of the Doctrine of Perseverance are thereby established. If the Beginning of true Faith and Holiness, and a Man's becoming a true Saint at first, don't depend on the felf-determining Power of the Will, but on the determining efficacious Grace of God; it may well be argued, that it is also with Respect to Men's being continued Saints, or persevering in Faith and Holiness. The Conversion of a Sinner being not owing to a Man's Self determination, but to God's Determination, and eternal Election, which is absolute, and depending on the fovereign Will of God, and not on the free Will of Man; as is evident from what has been faid: And it being very evident from the Scriptures, that the eternal Election which there is of Saints to Faith and Holiness, is also an Election of them to eternal Salvation; hence their Appointment to Salvation must also be absolute, and not depending on their contingent, self-determining Will. From all which it follows, that it is absolutely fix'd in God's Decree, that all true Saints shall persevere to actual eternal Salvation.

But I must leave all these Things to the Confideration of the fair and impartial Reader; and when he has maturely weigh'd them, I would propose it to his Consideration, whether many of the first Reformers, and others that succeeded them, whom God in their Day made the chief Pillars of his Church, and greatest Instruments of their Deliverance from Error and Darkness, and of the Support of the Cause of Piety among them, have not been injured, in the Contempt with which they have been treated by many late Writers, for their teaching and maintaining fuch Doctrines as are commonly called Calvinistic. Indeed some of these new Writers, at the same Time that they have represented the Doctrines of these antient and eminent Divines, as in the highest Degree ridiculous, and contrary to common Sense, in an Oftentation of a very generous Charity, have allowed that they were honest well-meaning Men: Yea, it may be some of them, as tho' it were in great Condescension and Compassion to them, have allowed that they did pretty well for the Day which they lived in, and confidering the great Disadvantages they laboured under: When at the same Time, their Manner of speaking has naturally and plainly fuggested to the Minds of their Readers, that they were Persons, who through the Lowness of their Genius, and Greatness of the Bigotry, with which their Minds were shackled, and Thoughts confined, living in the gloomy Caves of Superstition, fondly embraçed, and demurely and zealously taught the most absurd, filly and monstrous Opinions, worthy of the greatest Contempt of Gentlemen possessed of that noble and generous Freedom of Thought, which happily prevails in this Age of Light and Enquiry. When indeed fuch is the Case, that we might, if fo disposed, speak as big Words as they, and on far better Grounds. And really all the Arminians on Earth might be challenged without Arrogance or Vanity, to make these Principles of theirs wherein they mainly differ from their Fathers, whom they fo much despise, consistent with common Sense; yea, and perhaps to produce any Doctrine ever embraced by the blindest Bigot of the Church of Rome, or the most ignorant Mussulman, or extravagant Enthusiast, that might be reduced to more demonstrable Inconsistencies, and Repugnancies to common Sense, and to themselves; tho' their Inconsistencies indeed may not lie so deep, or be so artfully vail'd by a deceitful Ambiguity of Words, and an indeterminate Signification of Phrases .--- I will not deny, that these Gentlemen, many of them, are Men of great Abilities, and have been helped to higher Attainments in Philosophy, than those antient Divines, and have done great Service to the Church of God in fome Respects: But I humbly conceive, that their differing from their Fathers with fuch magisterial Assurance, in these Points in Divinity, must be owing to fome other Caufe than superiour Wifdom.

It may also be worthy of Consideration, whether the great Alteration which has been made in the State of Things in our Nation, and fome other Parts of the Protestant World, in this and the past Age, by the exploding so generally Calvinistic vinistic Doctrines, that is so often spoken of as worthy to be greatly rejoyced in by the Friends of Truth, Learning and Vertue, as an Instance of the great Increase of Light in the Christian Church; I say, it may be worthy to be considered, whether this be indeed a happy Change, owing to any such Cause as an Increase of true Knowlege and Understanding in Things of Religion; or whether there is not Reason to sear, that it may be owing to some worse Cause.

And I defire it may be confidered, whether the Boldness of some Writers may not be worthy to be reflected on, who have not forupled to fay, That if these and those Things are true (which yet appear to be the demonstrable Distates of Reason, as well as the certain Dictates of the Mouth of the most High) then God is unjust and cruel, and guilty of manifest Deceit and double dealing, and the like. Yea, some have gone so far, as confidently to affert, That if any Book which pretends to be Scripture, teaches fuch Doctrines, that alone is fufficient Warrant for Mankind to reject it, as what cannot be the Word of God. Some who have not gone so far, have said, That if the Scripture feems to teach any fuch Doctrines, fo contrary to Reason, we are obliged to find out some other Interpretation of those Texts, where such Doctrines feem to be exhibited. Others express themselves yet more modestly: They express a Tenderness and religious Fear, lest they should receive and teach any Thing that should seem to reflect on God's moral Character, or be a Disparagement to his Methods of Administration, in his moral Government; and therefore express themselves as not daring to embrace some Doctrines, though they feem to be delivered in Scripture, according to the more obvious and natural Con-

The CONCLUSION.

Conftruction of the Words. But indeed it would fhew a truer Modesty and Humility, if they would more entirely rely on God's Wisdom and Discerning, who knows infinitely better than we, what is agreable to his own Perfections, and never intended to leave these Matters to the Decision of the Wisdom and Discerning of Men; but by his own unerring Instruction, to determine for us what the Truth is; knowing how little our Judgment is to be depended on, and how extremely prone, vain and blind Men are, to err in such Matters.

The Truth of the Case is, that if the Scripture plainly taught the opposite Doctrines, to those that are so much stumbled at, viz. the Arminian Doctrine of Free-Will, and others depending thereon, it would be the greatest of all Difficulties that attend the Scriptures, incomparably greater than its containing any, even the most mysterious of those Doctrines of the first Reformers, which our late Free-thinkers have fo fupercilioufly exploded .--- Indeed it is a glorious Argument of the Divinity of the holy Scriptures, that they teach fuch Doctrines, which in one Age and another, thro' the Blindness of Men's Minds, and strong Prejudices of their Hearts, are rejected, as most abfurd and unreasonable, by the wife and great Men of the World; which yet, when they are most carefully and strictly examined, appear to be exactly agreable to the most demonstrable, certain, and natural Dictates of Reason. By such Things it appears, that the Foolifhness of God is wifer than Men, and God does as is faid in 1 Cor. i. 19, 20. For it is written, I will destroy the Wissom of the Wife; I will bring to nothing the Understanding of the Prudent. Where is the Wife! If here is the Scribe! Where is the Disputer of this World! Hath not God made foolish the Wisdom of this World? And as it is ufed used to be in Time past, so it is probable it will be in Time to come, as it is there written, in Ver. 27, 28, 29. But God hath chosen the soolish Things of the World, to confound the Wise: And God hath chosen the weak Things of the World, to confound the Things that are mighty: And hase Things of the World, and Things which are despised, hath God chosen: Yea, and Things which are not, to bring to nought Things that are; that no Flesh should glory in his Presence. TREATISE

In Three Parts;

PART I. Concerning the Nature of the Affections, and their Importance in Religion.

PART II. Shewing what are no certain Signs that religious Affections are gracious, or that they are not.

PART III. Shewing what are distinguishing Signs of truly gracious and holy Affections.

By the late

Mr. JONATHANEDWARDS, A. M. and Prefident of the College of New Jerley.

Abridged by WILLIAM GORDON.

Levit. ix. ult. and x. 1, 2. And there came a Fire out front before the Lord—upon the Altar;—which when all the People faw, they shouted and fell on their Faces. And Nadab and Abihu—offered strange Fire before the Lord, which he commanded them not: and there went out a Fire from the Lord, and devoured them, and they died before the Lord.

Cant. ii. 12, 13. The Flowers appear on the Earth; the Time of the Singing of Birds is come, and the Voice of the Turtle is heard in our Land; the Fig-tree putteth forth her green Figs, and the Vines with the sender Grape give a good Smell. Ver. 15. Take us the Foxes, the little Foxes, which spoil the Vines; for our Vines have tender Grapes.
